Rich. Saint George Norrey King at armes, in fauour of this worke.

It is faire from my purpoß, to commend without cause, or by our curious-florish to make a shadow scene shalloner, this works needs no such deseptis-offs; The subject is of it selfs shoonable, and able to shad without sich weak proppes. The slopy of our nation being almost buried in the piet of olicitary, is therein reuised, the continuance of Christianity raced from age to age, the suncting van discussion of our Townes, Castles, Religious Houles, Mobility, and all other memorable matters foliacly potraticle, as in a gladie we may Cattles, Reingious Froutes, Noomey and an other memorator matters of more y portraited, as in a gaine we may rightly different better (a hape, a quality and condition of each of them in particular. This worke therefore heiring now brought you not he publike flagge and view of the world, may in my poore cenfure give fainthfactor to the learned fleader, and ablot the touch of the malignant oppoler; which being effected without hope of gaine or wine otheration with furgreat cite both of body and mind, is the more precious, for, difficulting we pull. chra. Wherein Gods power is made knowne in this his weake, but worthy instrument : and the glory of Great lears. Wherein some power is made knowne into in wear, we wormy interument: and the glory of Great Britains made more famous to the world as well in the Geographical Genemion of the Land flustions as in the historical relations of her molt famous monarchand glorious actions; no Kingdome hisherts to particu-larly defenbed, nor nation History by true record more faithfully penale. In honor whereof I facilitee the lines of my loweyon the Altarof this worke, and celebrate the Authors remembrance to future polerities.

TO THE WELL-AFFEC-TED AND FAVOURABLE

READER.

Ogreat was the attempt to assay the erection of this large and laborious THEATRE, whose onely platforme might well have expected the readiest hand of the best Artist, that even in the entrance of the first draught as one altogether discouraged, I found my selfe farre in-fit and infurnished both of matter and meanes, either to build, or to beautifie to stately a project. But how the Lord then composed my mind for the worke, or rather how his owne great power would be feene in my weakenes, is now in some measure made manifest by raising the frame thereof to this height: which here from the Preffe sheweth his aspect unto the world . But with what content to thy eye (gentle Reader) I fland in suspence, so many Maister-builders bauing in this subject gone before me, and I the least, not worthy to hew (much lesse to lay the least stone in so beautifull a Building; neither can I for my heedlesse pre-Sumption alledge any excuse, unlesse it be this, that the zeale of my countries glory fo transported my senses, as f knew not what f undertooke, untill f faw the charges thereof (by others bestowed) to amount so high as I held it a conscience to frustrate their designements; wherein albeit, it may be obietted that I have put my sickle into other mens corne, and have laid my building upon other mens foundations (as indeed who can do otherwise, especially in a subject of this nature, seeing that the wifest of Kings witnesset, that there is nothing new vnder the Sun) ret let this " Eeda ? part suffise for my defence, that in the worke of the Tabernacle there was more mettals vied then the orient gold, and more workemen imployed then Aholiab & Bezaleel; neither did al the Ifraelites offer to that most glorious work, Gold, Silver, Onix-stones, Purple, Scarlet, and fine Linnen: but some of the, Brasse, VV ood, Goates-haire, Rams-fels, and Badgers skins, as necessary implements in their severall services. If then, with the poore widdow f cast in my mite, and by my owne trauell adde some what more then bath bene alreadie divulged, let me crave thy acceptance, where I have done right, and thine a sistance to correct where I misse, which I trust may as well be hoped as requested, thy love with mine being alike obliged unto this our native land. Neither are the faces of the Mountaines and Hils onely spread over with infinite heards and sorts of cattell, but their intralls also are in continuall trauell, and continually delivered of their rich Progenies of Copper, Lead. and Iron, Marble, Cristall, let, Alablaster, yea the most wonder-working Loadstone to say nothing either of Cannol and Sea-coale as rich for profit and as needfull for vie, or of the goodly Quarries of choisest stone, as necessary for strength, as estimable for beauty. Her Seas and Rivers fo stored with Fish, and her Fels and Fens so replenished with wild foule, that they even present themselves for ready prey to their takers; briefly, every soile is so enriched with plenty and plea-Jures, as the inhabitants thinke there is no other Paradice in the earth but where theselues dwell. The true plos of the whole land, & that again into parts in severall Cards are here described as likewise the cities and shire townes are inserted, whereof some have bene performed by others, without Scale annexed, the rest by mine owne travels, and unto them for distinctions sake the Scale of Paces, accounted according to the Geometricall measure, fine foote to a pace I bane set; but in this imployment I am somewhat to excuse my self from wrongs conceived done unto more beautifull and richer corporatios, which in this survey are in silence over passed, and places of leffe note & frequency described. For satisfaction wherof (good Reader) understand my purpose, according to the title presixed, which in this lland (besides other things) is to shew the situation of every city and shire town onely. So that without iniury to all, I could not infert some, though oftentimes it greeued me much to leave such beautifull places untouched: which notwithstanding being wel knowne So to be, giveth no little glory to the land in generall, so to be replenished with store es choise, as hardly can be indged which may be omitted. The Shires divisions into Lathes, Hundreds, VV apentakes and Cantreds according to their ratable, and accustomed manner f have separated and onder the same Title that the record bea-Tables to find all reth, in their due places distinguished; wherein by the helpe of the Tables annexed, any Citie, Towne, Burrough, Hamlet, or place of note may readily be found, and whereby safely may be affirmed that there is not any one kingdome in the world so exactly described, as is this our Hand of Great Brittaine, that onely excepted which Ioluah conquered and into Tribes divided. The armes of Such Princes and No-Armes of the G bles as have had the dignities, and borne the titles either of Dukes, Marquesses, or Earles, in the same Province, City or Place: and finally the Battels fought either by the forraine or home-bred Conspirators, I have also added. VV here we from under our owne vines without feare may behold the prints of indured miseries, fealed with the blood of those times, to the losse of their lines, and liberties; our selues (as in the reigne of Augustus, when the Temple, of Janus stood thut, and Mars his hands bound with chaines of Braffe as Virgill speaketh) heare not the found of the Alaru in our Gates, nor the clattering of armor in our campes, whose swords are now turned into mattockes and speares into sithes, as Micah sheweth the peaceable times under Christ. In shewing these things I have chiesty sought to give satisfaction to all without offence to any, wherof if I faile, yet this to my felf have I gained, that whilest I set all my thoughts and cogitations hereon, I had small regard to the bewitching pleasures, and vaine enticements of this wicked world, neither had I leafure to be led by an ambitious defire to raife my statio aboue the levell of my equals, or with base flattery to follow, and fill the eares of Fortunes Deputies, therains of the fe intents checking the bit of affection into another way. And applying my felfe wholely to the frame of this most goodly Building, have as a poore labourer carried the carned stones and polished Pillars from the bands of the more skilfull Ar-

SVRREY.

Chap.VI.

The length.

VRREY, by Beda called Suthri, and by the Saxons written subpea, lieth leparated vpon the North from the Counties of Buckingham and Middlesex by the great River Thamiis ; vpon the East Kent doth inbound it; vpon the South is held in with Suffex and Hampfhire : and her West part is bordered vp-

on by Hampshire and Barkshire The forme.

(2) The forme thereof is somewhat square, and lieth by North and by East, whereof Redrith and Frensham are the opposites, betwirt whom are exten-ded thirty soure miles. The broadest part is from Awfold fouthward, to Thamifis by Stanes, and them afunder twenty two: the whole in circumference is one hundred and twelve miles.

(3) The Heauens breathing aire in this Shire is most sweet and delectable, so that for the same cause many royall Palaces of our Princes are therein feated. and the Countrey better flored with game then with graine, infomuch that this County is by fome men compared vnto a home-spunne freeze-cloth, with a costly faire lift, for that the out-verge doth exceed the corry raire int, for that the out-verge doth exceed the middle it felfe. And yet is it wealthy enough both in Corne and Pafturage, especially in Holmessale, and towards the River of Thamists.

The ancient In-

(4) In this Shire the Regni (an ancient people mentioned by Ptolemie) were seated, whom he brancheth further thorow Suffex and some part of Hampfbire. And in the wane of the Romans government, when the Land was left to the will of Inuaders, the South-Saxons vnder Ella here erected their Kingdome, which with the first was raised, and soonest found end. From them no doubt the County was named Suthrrom them no doubt the County was named suti-rey, as feated vpon the South of the Riner; and now by contraction is called surrey.

(5) And albeit the County is barren of Cities or

Townes of great effate, yet is shee stored with many princely Houses, yea and fine of his Maiesties, so magnificently built, that of some shee may well say, no Shire hath none such, as is None-such indeede. And were not Richmond a farall place of Englands beft Prin-ces, it might in effeeme be ranked with the richeft for therein died the great Conqueror of France, King Edward the Third, the beautifull Anne daughter to Charles the Fourth, Emperour, and intirely beloued wife to King Richard the Second; the most wise Prince King Henry the Scuenth, and the rareft of her Sexe the Mirrour of Princes, Queene Elizabeth, the worlds

loue, and Subjects joy.

(6) At Merton likewise Kenulph King of the Well-Saxons came to his vntimely end : and at Lambeth the hardie Canute, and last of the Danish Kings, died among his Cuppes. But as these places were fatall for the last breath of these Princes, so other in this County have beene graced with the body and beginning of other worthy Monarkes: for in Chertfey Abbey King Henry the Sixth, who was deposed and made away in the Tower of London, was first interred without all funerall pompe, but for his holy life was imputed a Saint, and lastly translated, and intombed at Windfore: At Kingston likewise stood the Chaire of Maiestie, wherin Athelftan, Edwin, and Ethelred fate at their Corona tion, and first received their Scepter of Imperial Power. Guildford likewise hath beene farre greater then now it is, when the Palace of our English-Saxon Kings was therein fet, And feeing it is the midft of the Shire, the graduation from hence shall be observed, where for Latitude the Pole is raifed from the degree CI. 22. fcruples: and her Longitude from the West in the

22. terupies: and a fer Longitude from the Welt in the degree 20 and 2 feruples.

(7) Neither can we account Okam and Ripley, two small villages, the least in this shire, which haue brought foorth the well knowne men william de Camba Okam, that deepe Philosopher and admirable Scholar, and George de Ripley, the ring-leader of our Alchy-milts and mysticall impostors; both of them borne in milts and myficiall importors; both of them borne in its County, and very neere together. But why speake I of these, sith a place neerer to sight, and greater for imme, cuent Lambeth; sith the light Sear of Excelesticall Gouernment, Pietic, and Learning, and palace of Control Activation, and control to the place of the control Archives Archives, the Merophysic to Merophysics of England-First, exceed by Archives, and cours fince hastine been the residuo of all those worthy Prelaters of our formation of the Control Prelaters of our formation of the Merophysics Church, who in a long succession (even from Anne 5 96.) have continued to him that now most worthily fits at the Churches sterne, Richard by Gods prouidence Lord Archbishop of that See, a most faithfull and prudent Counfellor vnto King James, and a most learned and provident Guide of our most flourishing Church: whose gracious fauour vndeseruedly conferred vpon me, hath beene a great encouragement to red vpon me, hath beene a great encouragement to thefe my poore endeauors.

(8) Memorable places for Battles fought before the Conquelt, were Hembledom, where (when the full-neffe of prospertice burth foorth into Ginill Dissipping among the Saxon a bloudy Battle was fought between the two for the same and young Birshbert of Kent, wherin he was discomitted, and two of his pinicipal Leaders faine about the years of Christ, 60. and three hundred thirty three yeeres after, King Elfred with a small power ouercame the Danes with a

fred with a imall power ouercame the Jonnes with a fragreat flushers at Femham in this. County, which iomewhat quelled the courage of his flusage enemie.

(7) Neere Ringwood, and the place once Y T 5 ME, from God and peoples service, to Beast and luxurie, thirty sixe Parish Churches were converted and pulled downe by the Conquerour, and thirty miles of circuite inforrestred for his game of Hunting, wherein his Sons Riebard and Rufus, with Honry the second fonne to Duke Robert, his first, selt by hafly death the hand of Iustice and Reuenge: for in the same Forrest, Riebard by blasting of a pestilent aire, Rusus by shot taken for a beast, and Henry as Absatom hanged by a bough, came to their vntimely ends. At fo deares rate the pleafures of dogs, and harbour for beafts were bought in the blood of these Princes.

(8) The generall commodities gotten in this Shire, are woolls, Cloths and Iron, whereof great store is therein wrought from the Mines, and thence transported into all parts of this Realme, and their Clothes & Karfies, carried in to many forrain Countries, to that Countries great benefit, and Englands great praife. (9) The Trade thereof with other prouisions for the

The City Win whole, are vented through eighteen Market Townes in this Shire, whereof Wincheffer, the Britaines Case Gwens, the Ro-mans Venta Belgarum, & the Saxons Windanear Der is chiefe, ancientenough by our British Historians, as built by King Rudhudibras, nine hundred yeeres before the Nativitie of Lib. Notitie Christ: and famous in the Romans times for the weauings and embroderies therein wrought, to the peculiar vies of Zofimu their Emperours owne persons. In the Saxons time, after two Calamities of confuming fire, her walles were raifed, & the Citie made the Roiall feate of their Welt Saxons Kings, and the Metropolitan of their Bishops Sea, wherein Egber and Elfred their most famous Monarchs were Crowned & Honry the third, the Normans longest raigner, first tooke breath: And here king Aethelflane crefted fixe houses for his mint; but the Danish defolation over-running all, this circ test their turie in the daies of king Ethelbright, and in the Normans time, twice was defaced by the misfortune of fire, which they againe repaired and graced with the trust of keeping the publike records of the Realme. In the Ci-

uill warres of Mand and Stephen, this City was fore facked, but againereceiung breath, was by King Edward the third, appointed the place for Mart of wooll and cloth. The Cathedrall Church built by Kennolf king of the Well Saxons that had beene Amphibalus, S. Peters, Suythus, and now holy Trinuy, is the Sanctuary for the affices of many Eng-lish Kings: For herein great Egbert, Anno 836, with his fonneking Erbelwolfe, 857: Here Elfred, Oxfords founder, 901, with his Queene Elfonth, 904: Here the first Edmund you, with the Queene Lymn, you; that the fift Lamman, before the Conquest, 9.14, with his somes Essed, and Essemand: Here Edved, 955, and Edwy, 966, both kings of England: Here Emma, 1052, with her Danife Lord Canner, 1035, and his fonne Hardicanute, 1042: And here laftly the Normans, Richard and Rufus, 1100, were interred; their bones by Bishop Fox were gathered and shrined in little guilt co-fers fixed vpon a wall in the Quire, where still they remain carefully preferued.

This Citres lituation is fruitful and pleafant in a vally vnder hilles, having her River on the East, and Castle on the Vyinchester west, the Circuite of whose walles, are well necre two Englifhmiles, containing one thouland eight hundred and eightte paces; thorow which openeth fixe gates forentrance, and therein are feuen Churches for divine fernice, belides the Minfter, and those decaied fuch as Callender. Ruell Chappell, S. Maries Abbey, & the Friers, without in the Suburbes, and Sooke; in the Ealt is S. Peters, & in the North Hyde Church and Monafterie, whose ruines remaining, shew the beautie that formerly it bare. The Graduation of this Citie by the Mathematicks, is placed for Latitude in the degree 51 10 minutes, and for Longitude 19,3 minutes. (10) More fouth, is South hampton, a Towne populous, rich and beautifull, from whom the whole Shire derineth hername, most strongly walled about with square stone, containing in circuit, one thousand and two hundred pa ces, having feuen Gates for entrance, and twenty nine Towresfor defence, two very flately Keies for Ships arri-uage, & fiue faire Churches for Gods diuine seruice, besides an Hospitall called Gods house, wherein the vnfortunate Richard, Earle of Cambridge, beheaded for treason, lyeth interred. On the well of this Towne is mounted a most beautifull Castle, in forme Circular, and wall within wall, the foundation vpon a hill so topped; that it cannot be ascended but by flaires, carying a goodly prospect both by Land and Sea, & in the East without the walles, a goodly Church sometimes stood, called S. Maries, which was pulled down: for that it gaue the French direction of course, who with fire hadgreatly endangered the Towne: in flead thereof, it now newly erected a fmall and vinfinished Chappell. In this place, faith learned Cambden, flood the ancient Claufen istan, or fort of the Romans, whole circuit on that fide extended it selfe to the Sea: this suffered many depredations by the Saxon Pirates, and itt Anno 980, was by the Danes almost quite ouerthrowne. In king Edward the thirds time, it was fired by the French, under the Conduct of the king It WAS DEED OF THE FEBRUARY PRICE THE COUNTY MAN INCOUNTED AND OF Sields frome, whom a Country man incountred and flrucke downe with his Club, He crying Rancon, that is, Ran-firms: but he neither underflanding this language, nor the law that Armes dash billow, laids more flowed; figures; I kyow there are rancon, and therefore that thou die: and in Richard the feature of the reason of the rea

THE DESCRIPTION OF THE VVIGHT ILAND.

The ancient

The foile,

Ight Iland was in times \ past named by the Romans Vetta Vettis and Vittelis. by the Brittains, Guith, by the English Saxons, Wurt. land, & Wicy- fea (for an Hand they termed Lea) and in these daies visually called by vs , The Ifle of Wight. It belongeth to the County of Southampton, and lieth out in length ouer

against the midst of it southward. It is encompassed round with the Brittish seas, and seuered from the Maine-Land, that it may feeme to have been conjoined to it,& thereof it is thought the Brittish name (Guyth) hath been given vnto it, which betokeneth feparation, euen as Scieily being broken off.& cut from Italy, got the name from Secundo (which fignifieth cutting)
(2) The forme of this Isle is long, and in the mid-

The length. dest far more wide then at either end : from Binbridge He in the east to Hurst Castle in the west, it stetcheth out in length 20.miles, and in breadth from Newport hauen northward, to Chale-bay fouthward, 12. miles. The whole in circumference is about fixty miles.

(3) The aire is commended both for health and delight, wherof the first is witnessed by the long continuance of the Inhabitats in the state of their bodies before they be decaied, and the other for quantity giues place to no neighbouring Country.

(4) The ground(to fay nothing of the fea, which is exceeding full of fifth) confifteth of foile verie ruitfull; yet the husbandmans labour deferues to truttuil yet the hispanamans iapour deternes to bee thankfully remembred, by whose paines and industry it doth not onely supply it selfe, but af-fords corne to be carried forth to others. The land is plenteously stored with Cattle and Graine, and breeds euery where store of Conies, Hares, Par-tridges and Phesants, pleasant for medow, pasturage, and Parkes; fo that nothing is wanting that may fuffice man. The middeft yeeldes plenty of The delectable pasture, and forrage for Sheepe; whose wooll the Clothiers esteeme the best; next vnto that of Leinfer and Cotteswold: If you cast your eyes towards the North, it is all ouer garnished with Meadowes, Pastures and Woods: If towards the south side, it lyeth (in a manner) wholy bedecked with Cornefieldes enclosed, where at each end the Sea doth so incroch it selfe, that itmaketh almost two Ilands besides, namely, Freshwater Isle, which loo-keth to the West, and Binbridgessle, answering it to the Belga, spoken of in the seuerall Provinces of Sommersetsbire, Wiltsbire, and Hantsbire. Such as did then possessieit, were called Lords of the 1ste of wight , till it fell into the Kings hands, by Roger (Sonne to William Fitz Osburne flaine in the warre of Flaunders) that was driven into exile. And Henry the first King of England, gaue it vnto Richard Ridwers, with the Fee or Inheritance of the towns of Christ-Church, where, (as in all other places) hee built certaine Fortreffes.

(7) The principall Market Towne in the Isle is Newport that Newport, called in times past Aredona, and Nouns Burgus de Meden, that is, the new Burgh of Meden, Burgus de Meden, that is, the new Burgus of section, whereof the whole Country is divided into East-Meden, and West-Atedon. A towns well feared, and much frequented; vnto whose Burgesses his Maiesty hath lately granted the choise of a Maior, who with his Brethren, doe gouerne accordingly. It is populous with Inhabitants, having an entrance into the Isle from the Hauen, and a passage for vesinto the Hierrom the Flauen, and a pailage tor ver-fels of finall burden vnto the Key. Not faire from it is the Caftle Carestroke, whole founder is faid to have beene Whitgar the Saxon, and from him called white-Garesburgh: but now made shorter for easier pronuntiation; the graduation whereof for latitude, is in the degree 50. 36. minutes: and herlongitude in 1 9. 4. minutes, where, formerly hath stood a Priorie, and at Quarre a Nunnerie; a neceffary neighbour to those penitentiaries, And yet in their merry moode, the inhabitants of this Iland doe boaft, that they were happier then their neigh-bour Countries for that they neuer had Monke that ever wore hood, Lawyers that cavilled, nor

(9) This Isle of wight is fortified both by Are and nature; for besides the strength of artificiall Forts and Block-houses (wherewith it is well furnished) it wants not the assistance of natural Fences, as being enriched with a continuall ridge and range of craggy Cliffes, and Rockes, and Bankes very dangerous for Saylers, as the Needles, fo cal-led by reason of their sharpenes: The Shingles,

Mixon, Brambles,&c. (10) Vespassan was the first that brought it to the subjection of the Romans, whilest he served as a prinate person volter Comans, which are terted as a prinate person volter Claudius Cafar. And Cerdic was the first English Saxon that subdued it, who granting it votto Stuffe and Whitgir, they iointly together slew (almost) all the Brittish Inhabitants, (being but few of the, there remaining) in the Town aforefaid, called of his Name Whitgaresburgh. Wolpher King of the Mercians reduced this Iland afterwards Ning of the Meritans reduced this land afterwards wider his obedience, and at that time when hee became Godfather to Edelwalch King of the South-Saxons, and answered for him at his Baptisme; hee assigned it ouer vnto him, with the Province also of the Menuari. But when Edelwalch was flaine,& Aruandus the petty King of the Hand was made a-way, Cadwalls King of the West-Saxons annexed it to his Dominion, and in a tragical and lamentable maffacre put to fword (almost) cuery mothers child of the in-borne Inhabitants. The thing that is best worthy note and observation on is this, That Bishop Wilfrid was the first that in-structed the Inhabitants of this Iland in Christian religion, and brought them from that Idolatrous fuperstition, with the which (vnto that time) they were obscurely blinded eooap, lieth bounded vpon the North fide with Somerfet and Wiltsbires pon the West with Deuonshire, and some part with Somerset; yvpon the East altogether with Hamp-shire: and her South part is wholly bounded with the British Seas.

(2) The forme growes wider from the Weft, and fpreads herfelfe the broadelf in the midfl, where it extends to rewrit our emiles, but in length is no leffe then forty foure: the whole in circumference about tient norry four : the whole in circumference about is one hundred and firty miles.

(3) The aire is good, and of an healthful confliction the foliolis is far, affording many commodities, and the Countrey most pleasant in her fituation; for the In-land is warred with many fivest and fresh running fightings, which taking passing thorow the plaine Walles, do lastly in a louing manner vitre themselves. together, and of their many branches make many bigge bodied streames: neither doth the Sca denie orige contentrants: hether doth the Sea denie them entrance, but helpeth rather to fill up their Bankes, whereby Veffels of burden difcharge their rich Treasures, and herfelfe with open hand diftribu-teth her gifts all along the South of this Shore.

(4) Anciently it was possess of the by the Durotriges, whom Ptolemic placeth along in this Track, who being subdued by the Romans, yielded them roome, and viwilling subjection. After them the Saxons set and vanuing undection. Attention the Saxon ict froot in thele parts, whereof Paritand Secunds from that Part to take name, who in this place arrived in e-stone 70; and did forely infect and annoy all the South Track. And as sindow before him Kingglith King of the Wigh-Saxons, in the yever of Christ fel in a doubtfull and dangerous Battle vanquished the paritains. Neither were the Saxon for Jurely herein feated, but that the Danes fought to defeat them therfeated, but that the Danes iough to oterat them ther-ofs for twice thefe bold Rosers landed at Chartmouth, the first was in Anno 831. and raigne of King Ephorts; and the other eight yeeres after, when Ethelmusse was King, in both which they went away Visiors. Yet when the Iron-side wore the English Diademe, and these ficree people fought to plucke it from his Helmet, he met them at Pen-ham in Gillimpham Forest, and with a small power obtained a great Victoric, causing their King Canute with discourage to retire,

(5) Commodities arising in this Countie are chiefly Wools and Woods in her North, where the For refs are flored with the one, and the pleafant greene Hilles with the other. The inner-part is outerfired both with Corne and Graffe, and the Sea yeeldeth the Is the constitution of the Durnouaria, fituated upon the South fide of Frome and the Roman Cauffee called roff-wey, wherein fome of their Legions kept, as by the Rampiers and Coines there daily digged up is probably coniectured; at which time it feemeth the Citie was walled, whereof fome part yet flandeth, especially upon the West and South sides, and the Tract and Trench most appasouth nices, and net I race and I refer most apparent in a Quadrant-wife almost meeters the River, containing in circuit one thousand and seven hundred pales, but were east downe by the Danes, whose trampling set editorical things wheresoener they came, and hands heere razed the Trenches Maudhury. and Poundbury, the feales of their Siege, and fignes of times milerie. About three hundred pafes South-ward from hence, standerh an old Fortification of Earth, trenched about, and mounted aboue the ordinarie plaine, thirty pales, containing some five acres of ground; wherein (at my there-being) plentie of

Corne grew. This the Inhabitants call The Maiden-Caftle, having entrance thereunto only vpon the East and West. This is thought to haue beene a Summer-Campe or Station of the Romans, when their Garrisons Campe or Station or the Romans, when their Garrisons kept the Frontiers of this Proince.

The gouernment of this Citie is yearely committed to two Busliffes, elected out of eight Magistrates or Alderman, a Recorder, Towne-Clerke, and two Sergeants attending them : whence the North-pole is cleuated 50. degrees 48. minutes in Latitude, and for Longitude is remooued from the first West-point vnto the Meridian of 18. degrees.

(6) Other places also are memorable through the (6) Other places allo are memorable through the adtons therein happening, or antiquities there yellower remaining: flich is Bulbury, now nothing but a Troofs and decated Calife, hardly feen, though flometimes it was the Court of the Useft-Saxons King. Such allo is Corne., where Angelijae the English Apolite brake down the Atlars and Idals of the Saxons God Ital. whom they deuoutly honoured as the only conferuer of their health. Shaftesbury also, wherein one Aquila (whether a Man or Eagle I know not) by our Hillorians report, is faid to have prophecied the future times of this our Empire, and that after the raignes of the Saxons and Normans it should againe returne vnto the gouernment of the British Kings. But with such vaine predictions our Nation is more then once taxed by Philip Comineus the famous French Writer. In this Philip Comineus the famous French Wrter. In this City Edwards the Same of the Englishmen, was interred, being murdered at Corfe a Calife Gared in the Ile of Parbett, by his Step-mother. Asplith, to make way for her fonne to enity his Crowne: in repentance hands to a readine Hearing for his bload. thee whereof, and to pacifie Heauen for his bloud, shee built the Monasteries of Ambresbury and whorwell, in the Councie of Wilt-shire and South-hampton. In the former of which with great penitencie fiee frent

(7) As vpon the like occasion the Monastery of As vpon the like occasion the Monastery of Ariddeton was laied in this shire by king Ethelfan to appeale the Chost of Edwine his innocent brother, and appear to Confin Daniel in Indicent Drother, and to expiat the blood of that in Prince, whom most vniuslie hee caused to die : and with the like deuotion though not to fatishe for the like bloodie Sinnes, did Quene Cathery a sine a Disnere from hir second husband the Northumber- lands King, and at Winburne built her a Nunnery wher-of her lelfe became Abbesse, where afterwardwas raior not refre became xvoejje, where atterwardwas rajed a most statelje Minster, which added not onely more glory to the place, but withall enlarged the name, and made it be called Wimburmminster, where King Ethelred, a most vertuous Prince, after much disquietnesse had with the Danes, in peace heere resteth. with his Tombe and Inscription, as in his Historie (Christassifting) shall bee further seene. Neitheramong these may I omit Sherburne, which in the yeere of grace 704. was made a Bishops See, in whose Ca-thedrall Church were interred the bodies of Ethelbild and Ethelbert brethren, both of them Monarkes of the English men. (8) Seuen more belides thele were let apart from worldly imploiments, confecrated only to God and his service in this Shire ; which were Camestern, Crannisteracem ents once; which were cametern, or un-born, Abbotteibury, Bindon, Sturmisfer, Tarrant, and Warham. These with the others came to their full period vinder the hand of King Henry the Eighth, which lay with fuch waight vpon their faire buil-dings, that he cruilled the inice thereof into his owne Coffers,

(9) Calles for defense in repaire and decaied, were at Sherburne, Dorchester, Brankfey, Portland, Corfe, Shite.

Review, Woodford, and Wareham. So that with these and others the County hath beene strengthned with twelne Religious Houses, their poore relected, with eighteene Market Townes at this day is traded, and orincipally into five diufions parted, fitbditided in-torthirty foure Hundreds, and them agains into two hundred forty eight Parifhes, as in the Mappe and Table adioining is to be feerte.

(6) Vpon which last the chiefe City and Shire-Towne of this Counter is seated, and from that Riuer hath her same The City Ex-Excefter : this Citie by Ptolemie is called Ifca, by the Itmerary of Antoninus Emperour, Ifca Danmoniorum, by the Interest Of Amenium Empersur, 16th Dammonarum, by the English-Sawn Exnocarpora, and Manketon & by the Well Pencaer. It is pleafantly leated upon the gentle alcert of an hill, foliately for building, for the build his thickness, for frequent for Commerce and Concourse of transpers, that a more an define nothing but there is to be had, faith William of Malmesbury.

DEVON-SHIRE. EVONSHIRE, by the Cornill Britaines called Deninan : by the English Saxons, Devenprhype, and by contraction, of the vulgar, Denfire, is not derived from the Daner, as ome would have it, but from the people Daymony, the ame wee have spoken of in 4 Cormeall, and whom Ptolemic hath feated in these Westerne Borders. (2) The Well of this County is bounded altogether by the River Tamar : the East is held in with the verge of So-merfer Bire: and the North and South sides are washed whollie with the British and Senerne Seas. Betwixt whose shoares from Cunfere in the North, vnto Salcombe Hauen entering in at the South, are fiftee five miles : and from the Harriana Point Well, to Thorncombe Ealt, are fifty foure : the whole circumference about two hundred and two miles. (3) The Aire is sharpe, healthfull, and good: the Soile is hilly, wooddy, and fruitfull, yet so as the hand of the Manurer must neuer be idle, nor the purse of the Farmer neuer fall thut, especially of them that are farre from the Sea, whence they fetch a fand with charge and much trauell, which being spread vpon theface of the earth, bettereth the leannesse thereof for graine, and giueth life to the Glebe learness tensor to season, and participates with great efficacie.

(4) As Commall, to this hath the fame commodities that arise from the Seas: and being more inlanded, hath more arise from the Seas: and being more inlanded, and the season of the season o commodious Hauens for shippings intercourse, among whom Totnes is samous for Bruces first entrance, if Geffry say true, or if Hanillan the Poet tooke not a poeticall libertie when speaking of Brute, he wrote thus: which peaking on orms, he wrote thus:

This Citie was fo ftrong & Undence towards mecand mine. I INSCIRCE was to through the fowell thore of Britaines, that they held out against the Saxons for 465 yecres after their fiftentrance, and was not abfolutely wonne, vntill Athelfan became Monarch of the whole, who then peopled it with his Saxons and enriched the beautie thereof with many faire buildings: but in the times of the Danish defolations this Citie with the rest felt times of the Danillactolations this time with the reit left their deltroying hands; for in the yeere 875, it was by them fore affilied, Jpoyled, and flaken, and that most gree-nously by Sware in the yere of Christ Lefus 1003, who raced it downe from East to West, so that searly had it gotten breath before William the bastard of Normandy besseged it, against whom the Citizens with great manhood ferued, till a part of the wall fell downe of it selfe, and that by the hand of Gods prouidence, faith mine Authour: fince when it hath been three times befieged and with valiant refiftance euer defended. The first was by Hugh Courtney Earle of Desonfire in the Civill broyles betweet Lancalter and Torke, manybre in the culin broyies betwix Lancatire and Lore, then by Prink Warbeck, that counterficied Richard Duke of Tork and lailly by the Cornith Rebelsywherein although the Citizens were grieuoully pinched with Carlitic, yet continued they their faithfull allegeance with King Edward the fixt; and at this day flourisheth in Tranquillity and Wealth, being gouerned by a Maior, twenty foure brethren, with a Recorder, Towne Clerke, and other Officers their attendants. partly from her people : for shooting it selfe into the Sea like a Horne (which the Bri saines call Kerne) and inhabi ted by them whom the Sax ons named Wallian of thefe two compounded words it became Cormvallia. Not to trouble the Reader with the Fable of Corinens, coulin to King Brute, who in free gift received this County in reward of his proweise for wrastling with the Giant Gogmagog, and breaking his necke from the Cliffe of Doner, as hec of Monmonth hath fabuled.

Richard Carew. (2) Touching the temperature of this County, the aire thereof is cleanfed as with Bellowes, by the Billows that ever worke from off her enuironing Seas, where-thorow it be commeth pure and fubtill, and is made thereby very healthfull, but with all so piercing and sharpe, that it is apter to pre-ferue then to recouer health. The spring is not so early as in the more Easterne parts ; yet the Summer with a tempe rate heat, recompenseth his flow follering of the fruits, with their most kindely ripening. The Autumne bringeth a formewhat late haruest: and the Winter, by reason of the Seas warme breath, maketh the cold milder then elfewhere Notwithstanding, that Countrey is much subject to stormy blafts, whose violence hathfreedome from the open waves to beat upon the dwellers at Land, leaving many times their houseswaconered. (3) The foile for the most part is lifted vp into many hilles, parted afunder with narrow and short valles, and a

The Soyle. shallow earth doth couertheir outside, which by a Sea-weede called Orewood, and a certaine kinde of fruitfull Sea-food they make so ranke and batten, as is vncredible. But more are the riches that out of those hilles are gotten from the Mines of Copper and Time , which Country was the first, and continues the best stored in that Merchandize, of any in the world. Timans the Hifferian in Pliny reporteth, that the Britaines fetched their Tinne in wicker beats, flitched about with Lether. And Dioderns Siculus of Augustus Cafars time writeth, that the Britaines in this part digged Time out of ftonie oround, which by Merchanes was carried into Gallia, and thence Tinne Mines. to Narborne, as it were to a Mart. Which howfoever the Englife Saxons neglected, yet the Normans made great benefit thereof, especially Richard brother to King Honry the third who was Earle of Commall, and by those Time works became exceedingly rich : for the incursions of the Moores having Stopped up the Time mines in Spainer and them in German not discourred before the yeere of Christ, 1240, these in Printleges of Tinne Works Corswell supplied the want in all parts of the world. This Earle made certaine Time-Lawes, which with liberties and printleges were confirmed by Earle Edmund his fonne. And in the daies of King Edward the Third, the Commonweale of Time-workes from one body was divided into

foure, and a Lord Warden of the Stamiers appointed their (4) The Borders of this Shire on all parts but the Eaft. is bound in with the Sea : and had Tamer drawne his courfe but foure miles further to the North, betwixt this County and Denon foire, it might have beene rather accounted an Iland. then flood with the Mayne, Her length is from Launffen to the Lands and containing by measure 60 miles and the brodest part, stretching along by the Tomer, is fully fortic, les sening thence still lesser like a horne.

(5) The ancient Inhabitants known to the Romans, were the Danmony, that spread themselves further into Denon bire alfo, by the report of Diederm Siculus, a most current and civilipeople: and by Michael their Poet extolled for wa-low and firength of limmes: nor therein doth he take the libertie that Poets are allowed, to adde to the fubicet whereof they write, but truly reporteth what we fee by them perfor med, who in Actiuitic furmount many other people.

When the Heathen Saxons had feated themselves in the heft of this Land, and forced the Christian Britains into thefe rockie parts, then did Cornwall abound in Saints, vnto whole honor most of the Churches were erected, by whose name they are yet knowne and called. To speake nothing of Frfula that Counties Dukes daughter, with her companie of canonized Virgin-Saints, that are now reputed but to trou-ble the Calendar. These Britains in Commalis for send the Countrey, and defended themselves, that to the raigne of King Athelftane they held out against the Saxons, who subduing those Westerne Parts, made Tamar the Bounder betwixt them and his English, whose last Earle of the Bruish Rland was called Candorus

(6) But William the Baffard created Robert (his halfe-The Earles of (6) But Wallam the Daylora Created Assort von Daile brother by Herlotsa their mother) the first Earle of the Nor-mans race: and Edward the Blacke Prince, the ninth from him, was by his Father King Edward the Third inuested the first Duke of Cornwall, which Title euer fince hath continued in the Crowne, and now remaineth in the person of Englands great Hope, and full-rising Sunne, HENRY Prince of Wales, and Heire apparent to King I AM E s, our Soueraigne

Lord, and Great Britaines Manarch (7) The Commodities of this Shire, ministred both by The Cômodities. Sea and Soile, are many and great: for befides the abundance of Fife that doe fuffice the Inhabitants, the Pilchard is taken, who in great Skulles (warme about the Coast; whence being transported to France, Spaine, and Italie, yeeld a yeerely re-uenew of gaine vnto Commall: wherin also Copper & Tinne so plentifully grow in the vtmost part of this Promonsory, that at a low water the veines thereof lie bare, and are seene: and what gaine that commoditie begets, is rulgarly knowne. Neither are these Rockes destitute of Gold nor Salars, yea and

Diamonds shaped and pointed Angle-wife, and smoothed by Name her felfe, whereof some are as bigge as Walnuts, inferiour to the Orient only in blacknetle and hardnetle. Many are the Ports, Bayes, and Hamens that open into this Shire, both lafe for arrivage, and commodious for transports whereof Falmont b is to copious, that an hundred Ships may therein rideat ancour apart by themselues, so that from the tops of their highest Maststhey shall not see each other, and lie most fafely under the winder. (8) This County is fruitfull in Corne, Caste, Sea-Fift and Fools : all which, with other prouifions for pleasures and life, are traded thorow twenty two Market Towner in this Shire, whereof Launfton and Bodman are the best a from which last, being the middle of the Shire, the Pole is eleusted to the degree of Latitude 50.35, minutes, and for Longitude from the first West Point, 15,12, minutes, as Mercater hath meafured them, (9) Memorable matters both for antiquity and strange-(9) memorane maners out nor annuary and thange-netic of light, are thefe: At Basksmas ypon the South-well of her Promosters, is a Traphy erceced, which are eighteene Stones placed round in compatie, and pitched twelue foot each from others, with another farre bigger in the very center. These doe shew some Victorie there attained, either by the Remans, or elfe King Arbelffane. At the foot of the Reeks neere vnto S. Michaels monne, in the memory of our fathers, were digged up Speare-beads, Axes, and Swerds of Braffe, wrapped in linnen, the weapons that the Cimbrians and ancient Britaines anciently vied. At Camelford likewise process of Armours both for Horse and Man, are many times found in digging of the ground, imputed to be the figures of that Fight wherein Morared was flaine, and wherein great Arthur received his deaths wound. And at Cafile-Demys are the Trenches wherein the Daniel lodged when they first minded to subdue the Land. In the Parish S. Clare two Stones are pitched, one of them inscriber with a strange Character, and the other called the other halfe fore : the formes whereof we have expressed in the Mappe, The Harlers alfo, fabuled to bee men metamorphofed into flones : but in truth flew a note of force victorie, or elfa are fo fet for Land-markes Bounders. There also the Wring-shofe doth thew it selfe, which are huge Rockes heaped one vpon another, and the lowest of them the least, fashioned vpon another, and the lower or trent the least, namened like a Chose, lying preffed under the reft of those Hilles, which feemeth very dangerous to bee passed under Bus necre to Ponsau, and unto Mounts bay a farre more strange ypon others of meaner fize, with fo equall a counterpoize. hat a men may move it with the push of his finger, but no trength remove it out of his place. (10) Religious houses built, and suppressed within the limits of Cornwell, the fairest and greatest for account. were Leanifum, S. Wester, S. Burism, S. Michaels Mount and S. Gramson a Bishopa See: so was Bodown also, from whence King

Rocke Standeth, namely Main-Amber, which lieth mounted

Edward the Confessor removed at vnto the City of Excelle (11) The diuition of this Shire is into nine Hundreds wherein are leated twenty two Market Townes, and 161. Pa rith-Churches, whose names are Alphabetically gathered in the Table of this Chapter annexed.

croched vpon them, whereby many great Battles, as Malmesbury tels vs, betwixt them were fought, when in the young yeeres of their Heptarchie each fought to enlarge his, by the leffening of the next : but growne vnto more ripenesse, they assigned their limits by a great and long dirch crossing thorow the middest of these plaines, which for the wonder thereof is suppofed by the vulgar to be the worke of the Divell, and is called of all, Wan dike, vndoubtedly of woden, the Saxons Ancestor and great reputed God, where a little village yet standeth, and retaineth to name Wodensburg. At this place in Anno 590. Ceaulin the West-Saxon received such a foile of the Britaines and his Country-men, that he was forced to forfake his kingdome, and to end his daics in exile, becomming a piti full spectacle euen vnto his enemies, And in this place In a the West-Saxon joined battle with Ceolred the Mereian, whence both of them departed with equal losse. The like was at Bradford by Kenilwach and Cuthred; at Wilton, betwixt Egbert and Beornwolfe ; at Edindon where King Elfred was vanquisher of the Danes; and at Wilton, where the Danes wonne the day against him. With as bloudy successe, though not happening by fword, was the iffue of that Synod affembled at Calne a finall Towne in this County, in the yeere of Christ Icsus 977. where being hotly debating for the single life, and against the mariages of the Clergy, what wan-

The Cathedrall, a most rich magnificent Church, was begun by Richard Church Poore Bishop, and with forty yeeres continuance was raised to her perfect beauty: wherein are as many windowes as there are daies in the yeere, as many cast pillars of marble as there are houres in the yeer, & as many Gates for entrace as there are monthes in the yeere Neither doth this City retaine true honor to her felfe. but imparteth hers, and receiveth honor from others. who are intituled Earles of Salesbury, whereof eight noble Families have beene dignified fince the Normans Conquest, and now is enjoied by that most wife and loyall Counsellor Robert Cecill, Lord High Trea- The Earle of furer of England, and the worthy Patron of the place whereof my felfe am a member. ARKE-SHIRE, by the BONGER WAY English - Saxons written Repporreigne, whether of the Box Woods there lited. according to the censure of Asserius Meneuensis, or from a naked and bearelesse oke-tree, whereunto the people viually reforted in troublesome times. to conferre for the State, I determine not : onely the County a long time hath beene so called, and bounded with other in manner as followeth: The Northpart is parted by Thamifis from Buckingham and Oxford-sbires; the South neere Kennet doth tract upon Hampshire; the East is confined with the Countie of Surrey, and the West with Wiltsbire and Glocester-Shire is held in. (2) The forme of this Shire doth somewhat refemble a Sandale for a mans foot, lying longwife from East to West, in which part shee is broadest, the middle most narrow, and then spreading wider like to the heele : though for her rich endowments and flately magnificence, it may bee well accounted the heart of the whole. (3) The length thereof, from Inglesham in the West, to old windfor in the East, extendeth vnto for-

tie miles; from Inkpen to Wightham, the broadest part from South to North, are twenty foure; the whole in circumference, about one hundred and twenty. the Castell of Windfor, a most Princely Palace & Manfion of his Maiestie. I will not with felf ey affirme it to be built by King Arthur; but with better authority fay, it was fo thirsted after by the Conqueror, that by composition with the Abbat of Westminster, whose then it was, he made it to be the Kings Possession, as a Place befides the Pleatures, very comodious to entertaine the King. In this Called that victorious Prince King Edward the third was bornegand herein after he had fubdued the French and Scots, held be at one and the same time as his Prisoners, tohn King of France, and Danid King of Scotland. Neither was it euer graced with greater Maicfty then by the inflitution of the most honourable Order of the Garter, a signall Ornament of Martiall Prowefferthe invention thereof fome afcribe to be from a Garter falling from his Queene, or rather from Ioan Counteffe of Salisbury, a Lady of an incomparable beauty, as the danced before him, whereat the by-flanders finiling, he gaue the impreffe to checke all cuill conceits, and in golden letters imbelished the Garter with this French Poelic. The most princely Chapell thereof is graced with the bodies of these two great Kings, Henry the Sixth and Edward the Fourth, whom the whole Kingdome was too little to containe, the one of Lancaster, the other of Torke, where they rest now united in one mould, with a branch of both those Houses, euen King Benry the Hong the Eight Eighth, who there lieth also interred, and rests in the Lord.

(9) Other places of note in this Shire are Sinodum Sindum in the North, and Watham in the East, both of them Watham places of the Romans refidence, as by their Monies there oftentimes found appeareth. Neither was Sunning the leaft in this Tract, that had beene the Scat of eight Bilhops before the See was translated thence vnto Shirburne, or that to Salisbury. Wantage also is not wanting of honour, in bringing to life that learned and most valiant King Ealfred, the scourge of the Danes, and great Monarch of the English. Cafars com.

Anno 306. London walled

Iddiefex, so called in regard of the fituation, as feated betwixt the west-Saxons and East-Angles, was sometimes together with Effex and Hartfordshire, that part & portion which the East-Saxons enjoyed for their kingdome : it lieth bordered vpon the North. with Hartford-share, vpon the West by Colne, is seuered from Buckingham, the South, by Thamesu, from Surrey and Kent; & on the East from Esfex, by the River Lea.

(2) The length therof extended, fro stratford in the East, to Morehall, vpon Colne in the West, is by mea-fure nineteene English miles, & from South-mines in the North, to his Maiesties Manor of Hampton-court in the South, are little about 16 miles, the whole circumference, extending to ninety.
(3) In forme it is almost square, for ayre passing temperate, for foile abundantly fertile, and for pasturage & graine of al kinds, yeelding thebest, so that the wheate of this Countie hath served a long time, for the Manchet to our Princes Table.

(4) It lieth feated in a vale most wholsome and rich. hauing some hilsalfo, and them of good ascent, from whose Topsthe prospect of the whole is seen like vnto Zoar in Egypt, or rather like a Paradile and Garden

(5) The ancient Inhabitants known to Cafar, were the Trinobants, whom hee nameth to bee the most puissant in the land; whose chiefe citie and State yeelding him fubiection, made the whole, with leffe losse to the Romans, to beare the yoke of their own bon-dage, & to come in vnder termes of truce. But when their forces in these parts were spent, & the Empire shaken by intestine warres, the Saxons setting their eics vpon so faire a soile, made their footing as sure herein; which laftly with Hariford and Effex, was the portion of the Eaft-Saxens kingdome.

(6) Fine princely house, inheritable to the English Crowne, are feated in this Shire, which are, Enfield, Hariford. worth, Whitehall, S. Iames, & Hampton Court, a citie ra-ther in show then the Palace of a Prince, and for stately Port & Gorgeous building, not inferior to any in Eu-rope. At This leworth once stood the palace of Richard K.of the Romans, E.of Cornwal, which the Londoners in a tumultuous broile, burned to the Ground: many other stately houses of our English Nobility Knights Searchemenas also of the worthpful citizens of Lo-don, are in this Shire so fumptuoully built & pleasant-ly seated, as the like in the like circuite, are no where else to bee found. Nere vnto Thamesis entrance into this county, is kept the remebrance of Cafars entrance ouer Thamesis, by the name of Comay stakes, stucke fast in the Bottome to impeach his delignes; and further at Stanesa Maire-Stone once stoode, for a marke of Iurisdiction that London had so farre vpon Thamesis (7) Which city is more ancient the any true record beareth, fabuled from Brute, Troynouant, fro Lud, Lud Stone : But by more credible writers, Tacitus, Ptolemy & Antonine, Londiniu, by Aminianus Mercellinus for her CA anisonic, consumity of aminimate laceteening for net funcessive prosperity, Anaptha, the greatest fulle that can be given to any: by Britaines, Londayn, by the Saxons, London Ceapen, by Strangers Londay, and by the Saxons, London. This city doth flow as the Cedaryanog other trees, being the seare of the British Kings, the chamber of the English, the model of the land, & the mart of the world: for thither are brought the filk of Asia, the spi-ces from Africa, the Balmes from Grecia, & the riches of both the Indies East and West: no city standing so long in fame, nor any for divine and politick government may with her bee compared. Her wals were first fet by great Conflantine the first Christis Emperor, at the fute of his mother, Q. Helen, reared with rough stone & British Bricke three English miles in compasse. row which are now made 7. most faire gates, besides three other passages for entrace. Along the Thamesis

receptable for Ships. In the midft of this wal was fet a mile-marke (as the like was in Rome) from whence were measured their stations; for cariage or otherwise; the same as yet standeth, and hath bin a long knowne by the name of London stone. Vpon the East of this City, the church of S. Peters is thought to be the Cathedral of Reflitutus, the christian Bishops See; who liued in the Raigne of great Constantine; but fince 5. drallchurch, Pauls in the west part, from the Temple of Diana, asfumed that dignity, whose greatnes doth exceeds any other at this day, and spires so high that twice it hath bin consumed by lightning fro Heauen. Besides this cathedral. God is honored in one hundred twentyone churches more, in this city: that is, ninety fix within the wals; fixteene without, but within the Liberties; & nine more in her Suburbs : 86 in Fitz-Stephens time. thirteene Conuents of religious Orders. It is divided into tweety fix Wards, gouerned by fo many grave Alderme, a L. Maior & two Sherifs, the yeerly choice wher-of was granted them by Patent fro K. John; in whose time also a Bridge of stone was made ouer Thames, vpon nineteene Arches, for length, bredth, beauty, and building, the like againe not found in the world. (8) This London (as it were) disdaining bodage, hath set her selfe on each side, far without the wals, & hath left her West-Gate in the midst, from whence with continuall buildings (ftil affecting greathesse) she hath continued her streets vnto a Kings Palace, and ioined a second . Citie to her self, famous for the Seate. and Sepulcher of our Kings; and for the Gates of Infice, that termely there are opened, onely once a Bithops See, whose title died with the man. No walls are set about this citie, & those of London are left, to thew rather what it was, then what it is : Whose Citizens, as the Lacedemonians did, do impute their firegth in their men, and not in their wals, how firong focuer, Orelse for their multitude, cannot be circulated, but as an other Ierusalem is inhabited without walles, as Zacha. 3.4 Zachary said. The wealth of this Citie (as Isai once Isay 23.3. spake of Nilus) grows from the Reucnewes and Har-uest of her south-bounding Thames; whose traffique for merchandizing, is like that of Tyrus, whereof Eze-kiel speaks, & stands in abundance of Siluer, Iron, Tyn & Lead, &c. And from London her chanell is nauigable, straitned along with medowing borders, vntill she taketh her full liberty in the German Seas. V pon this Thamesis the Ships of Tharsis seeme to ride, and the Nauy, that rightly is termed the Lady of the Sea, fpreds her faile. Whence twice with lucky successe hath bin accomplished, the compassing of the vniuerhath bin accomplified, the compassing of the vniuer-fall Globe. This time Cansus, Juying fiege again! London, fought by digging to diuert, & before him the Danes had done great Harmes in the citic yet was their State recoured, by K. It feemeth this Towne hath been walled about, both by a Rampire of carth, mounted along her North & Weft parts, and places of entrance where gates have floode; which no and piaces of entrance where gates naue (1000e; which no doubt, by the Danes were call downe, in the yeare of Confidence). gueoro. By Abbo the Royall Towne, wherein at the day-breake of the Saxons conversion, Sigebers King of the East Angles founded a christian Church: and vpon one occasion of King Edmands burial (who at Haren was short of death) for King Edmands bury, where was a manife that faired Monatheries in the dometic more than faired Monatheries in the dometic more world, begunne by King Canate, much affrighted with the feeming appearance of that Marryrs Ghoft, who to expiate the Sacrilegious imprette of his Father Suenus, enriched the place with many endowments, and offred up his owne Crowne vpon the holy Martyrs Tombe. For the beauty & buildings of this Abbey and Towne, let Leyland for me declare: The funne (faith he) bath not feene a citie more finely fea. ted, so delicately upon the easie ascent of an Hil, with a Riverrun-ning on the East-side, nor a more Stately Abbey, cither for Renenewes or incomparable mornificence in whose prospect appearesh rather a Cityshen a Monastery so many Gates for entrance and ratuer a City tom a Nonojiery, je many Cate; fer extrance, and feme of them palle, je many Tomers, and a most few sour Church, upon which attend three others, flanding all in the fame Church yard, all of beam pafing flue, cft of a currious workman-flop. Who for Ruines lie in the duth, lamenting sheir fall, mouing the beholders to pitie their cafe, Neere vnto this Towne a great Battle was fought by Re bere Boffu Earle of Leicester, against his Soueraigne King Henry, 2. But was worthily our come by Richard Lucy, the Kings high Iuflice, himfelfe and wife taken, with many Flemings and Englishmen flaire.

(7) Other places worthy of remembrance this County affords, such is Essaing in the Ptoff, formerly famous for the birth of S. Andery, daughter to King Ama, onco of the three names of the Shires distifion. Rendiffson in the Enfl, where Redwald the first Christian in this kingdome held his Court: and Hadley in her South, where Guibrum the Dane whom Elfred baptifed, was buried. And things of stranger Note are the limits of the East-Angles Territories, running along New.market heath, vulgarly called the Duals-disches the like fable is formally told by Nubrigensis, that at Walpet the list and as following the same and the same as the and for fixe moneths was kept in the Castle, whence after he escaped agains to the Sea.

As strange, but most true, was a crop of Pease, that without tillage or lowing grew in the Rockes, betwirt this Or-ford, and Aldebrough, in the yeere 1555. When by vnfcslona-ble weather a great dearth was in the Land: there in August were gathered about one hundred Quarters, and in blofforming remained as many more: where never graffe grew, or earth ever feene, but hard folide Rock; three yards deep or earn terrectic, quintinuouse anequine y ausucept wider their Rootes.

(8) Places[oparted from compon v[c], and deutote to God and his fertice by religious Princes, were at S. Ed-mands, Infritch, Infrareth, Blubberre, Clere, LeItan, Burgh Leit, wherein Sigoberr Ring of the East-Angles entered the Profession of a Monke; but was thence forced by his people to fight against the Mertians: in which Battle hee was staine. And Dunnies where Fair founded his Episcopal Ses. These with many others in this County were suppressed in the fall of the Monasteries, and their Reuenewes assumed by King Hoory the eight.

(9) This Shire is principally divided into three parts, which are called the Celdable, S. Edmands, and S. Ambrys. iberties, fubdinided into twenty two Hundreds, and them The Market gaine into 575, Parish Churches, wherein are seated seuen agame into $75, Parith Churches, wherein are leated feuen Caffles, and twenty eight Market Townes. with Bedford and Huntington-Shires.

(2) This Province is not large, nor for aire greatly to bee liked, having the Fennes so spread vpon her North, that they infect the aire farre into the rest: From whose furthest point vnto Ratson in the South are thirty five miles; but in the broadest is not fully twenty: the whole in circumference, traced by the compasse of her many indents, one hundred twentie and eight miles. (3) The foile doth differ both in aire and commodities, the Fenny furcharged with waters : the South is champion, and yeeldeth Corne in abundance, with Meadowing-pastures upon both the sides of the River Came, which divides that part of the Shire in the midft, vpon whose East-banke the Muses have built their most facred seat, where with plenteous increase, they have continued for these many hundred yeeres. (4) For from ancient Grantcester, Camboritum by

Antonine, now famous Cambridge, the other breft and Nurse-mother of all pious literature, haue flowed full ftreames of the learned Sciences into all other parts of this Land and elsewhere : ancient indeed, if their Story bee rightly writ, that will haue it built by Cantaber Spaniard, three hundred feuenty fiue yeeres before the birth of our Sauiour, who thither first brought and planted the Muses. This City Grantesser by the Tyrannie of time, loft both her owne beauty and her professed Athenian Students, so that in Bedaes daies, feuen hundred yeeres after the Word became flesh, it is described to lie a little desolate Citie, and as yet retaineth the name, without any memorie of circuit by

Monke of Burton doth report, nine Scholars received their Baptisme, and became Preachers of the Gospel among the Britaines, which (as he faith) happened in the raigne of Hadrian the Emperour. But when the Picts, Scots, Hunnes, and Saxons had laid all things wafte, and with their fauage fwords cut out the leaves of all civill learning, this (as the reft) yeelded to deftru ction, and fo lay forlorne till the Saxons themselues became likewise civill; when Sigebert the first Chrifian King of the East-Angles, from the example of France, whither he had beene banished, built Schooles in his Kingdome, and heere at Grantcester the cheife, recalling thither the Professors of Arts and Sciences, as the Story recordeth, and Traditions doe hold.

Cambridge, hov it came to be c led Grant bridge.

But afterwards, as it seemeth, their increase being Straightned, the Students complained (as the Prophets did to Elisha) that the place was too little for them to dwell in, therefore enlarging more North-ward, feated themselves neere vnto the Bridge, whereupon the place began to be called Grant-bridge, though others from the crooked River Came will have it named Cambridge. This place (though facred and exempted from Mars, as Sylla once spake, when hee spared Athens) the Danes in their destructions regarded no whit, wherein they often wintred after their spoiles, and left the scarres of their sauage fores euer behinde them. And in the yeere 1 0 10. when Suen in his fiercenesse bare downe all before him, this place was no place for Scholars to be in : Warres loud Alarums ill conforting the Muses milde Harmonies. Yet when the Normans had got the Garland on their heads, and these Danish stormes turned into Sun-shine daies, Giflebert the Monke, with Odo, Terricus, and William, all three of the like Monasticall Profession, in the raigne of

King Henry the First, resorted vnto this place, and in a

publike Barneread the Lettures of Grammar, Logicke,

& Rhetoricke, and Gillebert Distinitie vpon the Sabbath and Festivall daies. From this little Fountaine (faith Peter Blessensis) grew a great River, which made all England fruitfull, by the many Masters and Teachers proceeding out of Cambridge, as out of a holy Paradife of God. The first College therein endowed with Possessions was Peter-house, built by Hugh Balsham Bilhop of Ely, in Peterhouse the the yeere of Grace 1284, whole godly example many others followed, so that at this day there are fixteene most stately Colleges and Halles, for building, beautic. endowments, and store of Students so replenished, that vnleffe it be in her other fifter Oxford, the like are not found in all Europe.

But at what time it was made a Vninersitie let Robert de Remyngton tell you for me. In the Raigne (faith he) of King Edward the First, Grantbridge of a Schoole by the Court of Rome was made a V niversitie, such as Oxford is. Lastly, the Meridian Line cutting the Zenith ouer this ding to Mercator, 20. degrees 50. fcruples, and the

Citie, is distant from the furthest West-point, accor-Arch of the same Meridian, lying betweene the Aequator and Verticall-point, is 52.degrees 20.fcruples. (5) Another City formerly in great fame is Elie, by the Saxons Eliz, had in account for the repute and holinesse of Votarie Numes, there residing; built first by Audrey wife to one Tombret a Prince in this Pro- Saint Audrey. uince, who had this place as a part of her Dowry fhee having departed from her fecond husband Eebert King of Northumberland, denoted her felfe to the scruice of God, and built heere a Monasterie, whereof the became the first Abbesse. This in the Danish deso-folations was destroiced, but soone after recdified by Ethelwold Bishop of Winchester, who stored it with Monkes, vnto whom King Edgar granted the inridi-ction ouer foure Hundreds and a halfe, within these Fennes and the East-Angles limits, which to this day are called The Laberties of S. Audrey : after whose example, many Nobles to enriched it with large Renenewes, that as Malmesbury faith, the Abbat therof laid op yeerely in his owne Coffers a thou and foure hundred pounds. And of latter times the Monks therof became fo wealthy, that their old decaied Church they renued with new and most stately buildings, which is now the Cathedrall of the Discesse, and for beautie giueth place to no other in the Land. Eight other foundations fet apart from fecular vie in this Prouince, were at Thorney, Charteres, Denny, Elfey, Beach, Barnwell, Swafey and Shenger, all which in the daies of King Henry the eighth came to the period of their furpassing wealth, and left their Lands to the dispose of his Will.

(6) The generall commodity of this Shire is Corn. which in the South, and Champion-part doth abundantly grow, as also Saffron, a very rich spice. Some Woods there are, and Passure both pleasant and profitable. The North part thereof is Fenny, but withall fruitfull, whereof Henry of Huntington and William of Malmesbury thus doe write : This Fenny Country is pal fing rich and plenteous, yea and beautifull also to behold, wherein is fo great store of Fish, that strangers doe wonder and water-foule so cheape, that fine men may therewith be satisfied with lesse then an halfe-penny.

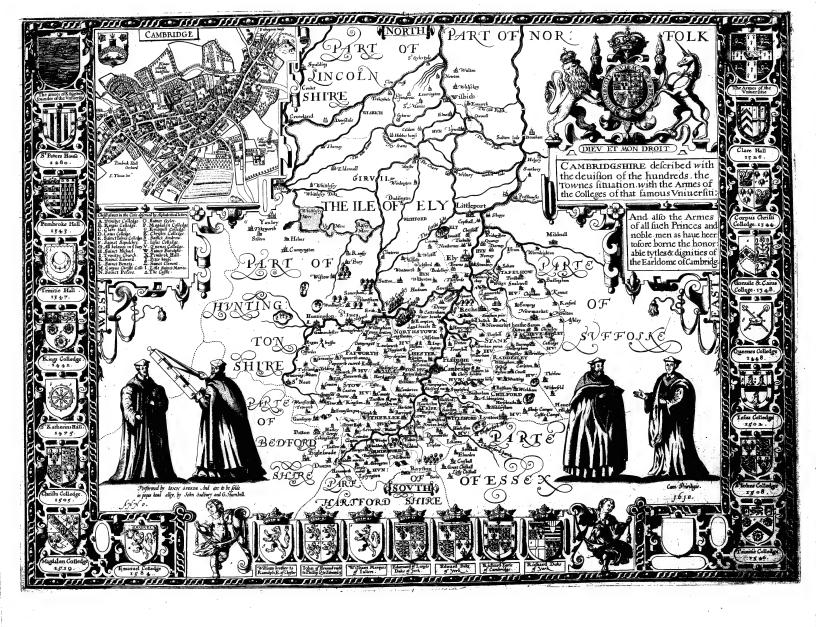

(7) Places of ancient note in this Shire are these, the Erminstreet-way, which vpon the lower West parts of this County thorow Roisson runneth forthright vnto Huntingdon, And from Reach, a Market-Towne stan ding neere to the River Came, a great Ditch and Trench is cast all along New-market-heath, which for the wonder conceined thereat, is of the Vulgar called The Diuels Ditch, being in truth made for a defense against the Mercians, by the East-Angles, whose Kingdome it inuerged. The Gogmagog Hils neere Cambridge retaine the remembrance of the Danift Station, where as yet on their tops is seene a Rampier strengthned with a three-fold Trench, whereof Gernafe of Tilbury telles vs

many a prety Tale. (8) This Shire is divided into feuenteen Hundreds. wherin are scated eight Market Towns, and hath beene strengthned with seuen Castles, and God divinely honoured in one hundred fixty three Parish-Churches. K 2.

Ertford-sbire is bordered vpon the North with Bedordand Cambridge-fbires; vpon the East, is altoge-ther bounded by Estex vpon the South, is confined with Middlefex; and her West butteth vpon Buckingham and Bedfordshires

(2) The formethere of is fomewhat circular, with many indents to fetch in those Townes that are dispersedly stragled into her next shire: whereof Roiston and Totteridge are the two extremes from North to South, betwixt whom in ftrait drawne line are twenty feuen English Miles, and from Putnam westward, to Cheston Nunnery in the East, are twenty eight; the whole circumference, a-bout an hundred and thirty miles.

(3) The aire is temperate, fiveet, and healthfull, as seated in a Climate neither too hot, nor too cold: the foile is rich, plentious, and delightfull, yeelding the lone is rich, pientions, and dengittent, yections abundance of Corne, Cattle, Wood, and Graffe, defititute of nothing that ministreth profit or pleasures for life, which are more augmented by the many Rivers that arise and run thorow this Shire, watering her owne

and others, till they empty themselues into the Sea. The ancient In (4) Her ancient Inhabitants in the time of the Romans were the Cattieuchlanians, or Cassijans, and the Trinobantes, as their Writers declare, and in the Heptarchy was possessed by the East-Saxons, excepting some small portion therof that the Mercian Kings enioied. The Danes also in their ouer-runnings, sought to stay themselues in this Shire, and at Ware (then Weare) pitched downe their rest and hope: for passing the Les in their light Pinnaces and Shallops, raised therin a Fort, which maugre the English they kept, vntill that by the wife policie of King Elfred, that River was parted into more running streames, whereby their Ships perished, and they intercepted both of prouisi-

on and further supplie. (5) The Romans before them had made Verolanium in this Shire their greatest for account, which in Neroes time was a Municipial, as Ninius in his Catalogue of Cities doth cal it, or as Tacitus, a Free Towne; lacked by Boduo that euer eternized Queene of the Icenians, when feuenty thousand of the Romans and Confederates by her reuenging fword perished: the site and circuit whereof, in this Card we have fet according to our view and measure there taken : whose magnificence for Port and stately Architecture, were found by her large and arched V aults in the daies of King Edgar, which were digged into and cast downe by Elred and Edmer, Abbats of S. Mercian, in great denotion, built a most stately Mona-fterie, whose Church yet standing, retaineth the ashes of many Nobles, there flaine in the quarrell of Yorke and Lancafter; and a Font of folid braffe brought out of Scotland by Sir Richard Lea, from the flege of Leeth. (6) Many other Townes, both for Commerce, Market Townes stately Buildings, and of ancient Record, this Shire affoordeth, whereof Hertford, though the Shire-Tenne, is not the richest; the passage thorow Ware hath left her waies to vntrodden: to preuent which, in former times that River at Ware was chained vp, and the Bailiffe of Hertford had the custody of the Key: which howfocuer they have loft, yet hath the Towne gotten her Governour to be preferred from the name of a Bailiffe, vnto a Maior, assisted with nine Burgesses, a Recorder, and two Sergeants their Attendants. Hererian Caffle, for lituation pleafant, for Trenth, Walles, and River, furficiently fenfed, was lately scene; but marked to destiny, as the Towne to decay, hath found the hand of Fortune to ouermatch her strength and to ruinate the Priorie, S. CHAPTER XXI. Edford-flire, seated in the South-east of this Iland, is a plaine and champion Country, and lieth bounded upon the North with Huntington-Shire; VDon the East, with Cam-bridge and Hartford-shires; vpon the South, with fhires; and vpon the West, with Buckingham and Northampton-foires.

(2) The forme thereof is somewhat ouall, and not very large: for from Tilbroke in the North, vnto Studham in the South, are but twenty foure English miles; and from Turny in the West, vnto Hatley Co-king in the East, are not fully fourteene; the whole in circumference, about seuenty three miles.

(3) The aire is temperate, and the soile bountious, especially the North, whose Borders the fruitfull Onfe with her many windings watereth. The South is more leane, and with greater industry bringeth forth Barley, no better elsewhere. Generally, this County is Champion, though some places belprink-led with Pasturage and Woods.

(4) The ancient Inhabitants, knowne to the Romans, that held in this Shire, were part of the Cattieuchlani, a front and warre-friring people; and yet vpon the report of Cefars proceeding, fent him their fubication for peace. But when that conquering Nation had brought Eritaine into a Province vnder Rome, their Legions lay at Selenae and Magintum, which are their Legions say at Selente and Deagnium, which are now Sendy and Dunflable, places of memorable note in this Shire. After them, the Sacons coucting for so faire a Seat, first dispossession the Britaines, under the leading of Custowulfe the West-Sacon, about the yeere of Grace 572. who making it their owne, was laftly enjoyed by the Mercians, as a part of their Kingdome.

(6) This Countie, among the common calami-(6) I has Counte, among the common caramites of the Land, when it lay trampled water the feet of the Daner, furlained a part: and after that, in the time of King Stephen, when the Cinill Warres thundred betwith Maul the Empire and hintleffe; the Shire-Towne was fore walked, with great flaughter of many control of the Counter of King. So when the Barons for looke their allegeance to King John, the Towne and Castle were rendred up vnto their hands : and laftly, by King Henry the Third, laid leuell euen with the ground, fome ruinous walles appearing towards the Oufe, but not a stone left vpon the Mount where stood his foundation. (7) This Towne by the Britaines was called Let- Bedford.

At the first entrance flandeth S. Leonardi Hospitall for Lazars : and trance transcent second as reputation to Zenes and the truther inwards, Saint Islans and S. Maries Churches; Churches smite-within the Towne, S. Pauls, a most beautiful Church, ligious boists in S. Cuthberts, and S. Peters: without the Towne standesh the Friers, S. Loves, Alhallomes, and Candwell Abbey: not farre whence, fometimes flood a Chapell vp-on the Banke of Oufe, wherin (as Florilegue affirmeth) the body of Offa the great Mercian King was interred, but by the ouer-fwelling of that River, was borne downe, and swallowed vp: whose Tombe of Lead (as it were some phantasticall thing) appeared often Tombe. to them that feeke it not, but to them that feeke it (faith Roffe) it is invisible. Vekingham, for the plenty of Becch-trees there growing, and those in the elder times of the Saxons called Bucken, may well be fupposed from them to have the name, as afterwards the whole Shire had hers from this Towne Buckingham. (2) In forme it somewhat resembleth a Lion Rampant, whose head or north-point toucheth the Counties of Northampton and Bedford, whose backe or eastpart is backed by Bedford and Hertford-fbires : his loines or fouth-borders rest vpon Bark-shire, and his breast the west side is butted vpon wholly by Oxfordfbire. The length thereof from Waisbury in the fouth, to Bradfeld in her north, are thirty nine miles: the bredth at the broadest, from Afridge in the East to Brenwood Forest in the West, are eighteene; the Circumference. whole in circumference one hundred thirty eight

> (3) The aire is passing good, temperate, and plea-fant, yeelding the body health, and the mind content. The foile is rich, fat, and fruitfull, giving abundance of corne, graffe, and marle. It is chiefly divided into two parts by the Chiltren hilles, which run thorow this Shire in the middeft, and before time were so pestred with Beech, that they were altogether vnpaffable, and became a receptacle and refuge for theeues, who dailie endammaged the way-faring man; for which cause Leoftan Abbat of Saint Albans caused them to bee cut downe: fince when those parts are passable, without any great incombrances of trees; from whose tops, a large and most pleasing prospect is seene. The Vale beneath is plaine and champion, a clayie-foile, fulfe, and rough, but withall maruellous fruitfull, naked of woods, but abounding in medowes, paflures, and till lage, and maintaining an infinite number of fheepe, whose soft and fine fleeces are in great esteeme with

(4) The ancient Inhabitants that were feated in this Shire, were the Cattieuchlani mentioned by Ptolemie, and them difperfed thorow the Tract of Bedford, Hertford, and this. These yeelded themselves with the first to Cafar vnder the Romans subjection, whose ouer-worne Empire ending in Britaine, the Saxons by strong hand attained this Prouince, and made it a part of their Mercian Kingdome: yet was it first subdued vnto them by Cherdike the West-Saxon, Cherdike the West. whose memorie is in part continued in the Towne Chersey, you the West of this County, where in a tharpe and bloudy battle he was Victor ouer the Britaines. So also Cuthwulfe a West-Saxon at Alesbery in the yeere of Grace 592. Ouercame the Britaines, and bare downe all things before him; yet no fooner was their Heptarchie wained, and their Monarchie able to stand alone, but that the Danes, before their strength and growth was confirmed, waxed vpon them; and they not able in so weake a hand to hold fast that weight of greatnesse they had so grasped, gaue place to their Conquerours, who did many harmes in this Province : for in the yeere of 4. the Danes furiouslie raged as farre as Brenwood, where they destroied the City Burgh, the ancient feat of the Romans, afterwards

The River circulates this Towne on every side, that only on the North excepted, ouer which three faire stone-bridges lead, and into which the springs of a Well run, called S. (6) A Towne of ancienter note is Stany-Streeford, the Romans Lactorodum, being built upon that ancient Caufey-way which is called Watting-freet, where remaine the markes thereof even vnto this day. Arthis place Edward the elder stopped the passage of the Danes, whiles he strengthned Torcester against them ; and heerein, King Edward the eldest fince the Con-quest, reared a beautiful Crosse in memory of Eleanor his dead Queene, as he did in every place where her Corps rested, from Herdby in Lincolne-shire, till it was received and buried at Westminster. (7) Places intended for Gods true worship, built Places of Relia by deuout persons, and sequestred from worldly imby detious persons, and requestred from worsely im-ploiments, were at Launden, Luffeld, Bidlefden, Brad-well, Nether, Ankerne, Missens, Teckend, Partren-dune, Astridge, and Alesburie: Astridge in great repute for the Lloud (supposed out of Christs sides) brought out of Germanie by Henry the eldest sonne of Richard King of the Romans, and Earle of Cornwall, whereunto reforted great concourse of people for denotion, and adoration thereof, But when the funne-shine of the Gospell had pierced thorow such clouds of darknes, Colpetinal piercea enrows usen closus of carknes, it was perceived apparantly to be only hony clarified and coloured with laffron, as was openly shewed at Pauls Cross to the Bishop of Reviellers, the twentie fourth of Februarie, and year of Christ 15,38. Booke.1. The measure an The Climat. The ancient In Hereford the

EREFORD-SHIRE. (formerly accounted within the Limits of Wales) lieth circulated vpon the North with Worcester and Shrop-shire; vpon the East with Maluern Hils is par-ted from Glocester-live: vpon the South is kent in with Monmouth-fbire; and vpon the West in part with the Hatterall Hils is divided from Breknok; and the rest confined with Radner

2) This Counties Climat is most healthfull and temperate, and foile so fertile for corne & cattell, that no place in England yeeldeth more, or better conditioned : fweet rivers running as veines in the body, doe make the corne-bearing grounds in some of her parts rightly to be termed the Gilden V ale: and for waters, wooll, and wheat, doth contend with Nilus, Colchose, and Egypt: fuch are Lemster and Irchenfeild, the banks of Wye, Luge, and Frome.

(3) The ancient People knowne to the Romans.
(whole power they well felt before they could fub-

due them) were the Silares placed by Ptolemie in this tract, and branched further into Radnor, Breknok, Monmoth, and Glamorgan-figures, at this day by vs called Southwales, and by the Welsh Deheubarth. Their Originall, as Tacetus coniectureth by their fite, coloured countenances, and curled haire, was out of Spaine, and as both he and Plinie describes them, were herce, valiant, and impatient of feruitude, which well they shewed under Carataeus their Captaine, & nine yeeres fcourge to the Roman affaulters, for whose onely con-quest, (and that made by treachery) the Victor in Rome triumphed with more then a vivall Afpect; and with so equal an hand bare the Scoale of Resistance. that their owne Writers euermore terme it a dangerous warre. For the Legion of Marius V alens they put to flight, and that with such hauocke of the Associates, that Ostorius the Lieutenant of Britaine for very griefegaue yn his ghoft : and Feranis vonder Nero affailted them in vaine. But when Feljalfas was Emperor, and expert Souldiers imployed into euery Prounce, Julius Frontinus fündude theie Silares vinto the Romans, where continually some of their Legions afterward kept, till all was abandoned in Valentinians

(4) The Saxons then made themselves Lords of this Land, and this Prouince a part of their Mercians kingdome; yea and Sutton the Court of great offa

their King. (5) But Hereford after, raised of the ruines of old Ariconium, (now Kenchester, shaken in pieces by a violent Earth-quake) grew to great fame, through a con-ceiued Sanctitic by the buriall of Ethelbert King of the East-Angles (laine as Sutton by Offs, at what time he came thirther to have elpoused his Daughter; whose Grave was first made at Marden, but afterwards canonized and remoued to this Citie, when in honour of him was built the Cathedrall Church by Milfrid, a num was bunt the Ameeran Church by Meijral, a petry King of that Country, which confish brine of Southwales, and Algar an Englishman rebelling against King Edward Confessor, consumed with fire; bur by Bilhop Reinelin was reflored as now it is, at what time the Towne was walled, and is fo remaining in good repaire, hauing fix Gates for entrance, and fifteene Watch-towers for defence, extending in compaffe to fifteen hundred Pales : and whence the North-pole is observed to be raised 52 degrees, 27. minutes in Lati-titude, and is set from the first point of the West in Longitude 17. degrees and 30. minutes, being yeerly gouerned by a Maior chosen out of one & thirty Citizens, which are commonly called the Election, and hee euer after is knowne for an Alderman, and clothed in Scarlet, whereof foure of the eldeft are Iusti-

the an Scariet, wherever fource of the eldett are Intitices of Peace, graced with a Sword-bearer, a Recorder, a Town-Clerke, and foure Sergeants with Mace.
The greateft glory that this Citie received, was in King Athelians dates; where (as Mahmbur) doth report) he caufed the Lords of Nales by way of Tribute, to pay yeerly (belides Hawkes and Hounds) twentie pound of gold, and three hundred pound of filuer by waight; but how that was performed and continued finde not.

(6) Things of rare note in this Shire are faid to be, Bone-well, a fpring not far from Richards Castell, wherein are continually found little Fishes Bones, but not a fin feene; and being wholly cleanfed thereof, will notwithflanding haue againe the like, whether naturally produced, or in veines thither brought, no man (7) But more admirable was the worke of the Omnipotent euen in our owne remembrances, and veere of Christ Iesus 1571, when the Marcley Hill in the or Christ feius 1571, when the Markey Hill in the East of this Shirerouzed it felfe out of a dead fleepe, with a roaring noife remoued from the place where it flood, and for three daies together trauelled from Marcley Hill. her first fite, to the great amazement and feare of the beholders. It began to journey vpon the feuenth day of February, being Saturday, at fix of the clocke at night, and by feuen in the next morning had gone fortic Pales, carrying with it Sheepe in their coates, hedge-rowes, and trees; whereof fome were ouertur-ned, and some that flood upon the Plaine, are firmely growing vpon the Hill, those that were East, were turned West; and those in the West were set in the East; in which remoue it ouerthrew Kinnafton Chappell, and turned two high-wales neere a hundred yards from their viuall paths formerly trod. The ground thus rauelling, was about twenty fix Acres, which opening it lefte with Rocks and all, bare the Earth before it for foure hundred yards space without any stay, leaving that which was Pasturage in place of the Til-lage, and the Tillage overspread with Pasturage, Lastlage, and the 1 mage offers press with transfer, and they experience the lage of the lage laid his hand upon this Rock, whose power bath poi- Esay 40.12. fed the Hils in his Ballance.

whose streame bare downe the Walles of all those foundations, carrying away the Shrines of the dead and defacing the Libraries of their ancient Records

(9) This County before the Conquest being accounted in Wales, was then strengthened with Forts againft the English and being once made a Province to England, was fortified with Caftels againft the Welfs, wherein we finde no leffe then twenty eight, though many of them now are ruinated to nothing. Such

The antient Sax on Dame. The bounds

Book ...

ORCESTER-SHIRE. by the English-Saxons called Wip - ceap - pep-reyne is a County both rich and populous, and lieth circulated vpon the North with Stafford-fire; vpon the East, with Warwicke and Oxford-fbires; vpon the South, with Glocefter-fhire

& the West by Maluern hilles is parted from Herefordfbire: the rest lieth confronted vpon, and in part diuided from Shrop-flure by the River Dowles.

(3) The aire in this Shire is of a favourable tom-perature, that gives an appetite for labour, diet, and rest: the soile is fertile, and to me seemed inferiour to none other in this Land : for besides the abundance

(2) The forme thereof is triangle, but not of equall proportion; for from North to South are thir-The length. breadth and cir tic two miles, from South to North-west twenty two, and from thence to her North-East point are twentie eight: the whole in circumference is one hundred and twentie miles.

of Corne in euery place foread, the Woods and Pa-flurage in her hilles and plaines, sweet Riuers that wa-ter the vallies below, & Cattle that couer the tops of higher ground; the Fields, Hedge-rowes, and Highwaies are beset with fruitfull Peare-trees, that yeeld great pleasure to fight, and commodious vierfor with their juice they make a bastard kinde of wine, called

Perrey, which is both pleasant and good in taste. Many Salt Springs also this County affoordeth, yea and more then are commonly in vie : fuch with the Germans, our ancient Predecessours, were esteemed most facred and holy, fo that (as Tacitus writeth) to fuch they wontedly reforted to supplicate their Gods with their deuout praiers, as to places neerest the heatens, and therefore the fooner to be heard. And Poets in their failtings will have the Nymphs refidence in fla-die greene groues, and bankes of fweet fprings: if fo, then (as Helliem) this Gounty affoords both: fuch are the Forrests of Wire and Feckenham, the great Woods of Norton, and most faire Chase of Maluerne And for Waters, to witnesse what I say, is the Seuerne that cuts this Shire in the midft, Teme, Salwarp, and Auon, all of them making fruitfull their paffage, and ftored with Fish of most delicious taste.

(4) The ancient people, possessor of this Shire were the CORNAVII, inhabitants of Chesses of the Corna viii, inhabitants of Chesses of the Corna viii. Shrop-shire, Stafford, and Warmick-shires, subdued by the Romans in Claudius Cesars time, and after their departure, made a portion of the Mercian-Saxon Kingdome, and in Bedaes time were called the Wiei whereof it may be this Shire had the name : wnleffe you will haue it from the Salt-Pits, which in old English are named Wiches; or from the famous Forest of Wyre. Howfocuer, true it is that the County doth hold the name from her chiefe City worsefter. (5) Which is most pleasantly seated, passing well frequented, and very richly inhabited. This was the Branonium, mentioned by Antonine and Ptolemie, called by the Britaines, Caer-wrangen; by Ninius, Caer Guoreon; by the old Saxons, Wipe cearpon, and by the Latines, Vigornia. This Citie is seated vpon the East banke of Severne, and from the same is walled in triangle-wife about, extending in creations the sun of the same swant fenfe. It is thought the Romans built this to reftraine the Britaines that held all beyond Senerne. This City by Hardy Canute in the yeers of Christ 1041, was fore-

lie endangered, and fet on fire, and the Citizens flaine almost euery one, for that they had killed his Colle-Ctor of the Danish Tribute: yet was it presently repair red and peopled, with many Burgesses, and for fifteenc Hides discharged it felfe to the Conquerour; as in his Domefdayes is to be feene. But in the yeere 1113. a Doomes dales fudden fire happened, no man knew how, which burnt the Castle and Cathedrall Church, Likewise in the civill broiles of King Stephen it was twice lighted into a flame, and the latter laid it hopelesse of recouerie. Notwithstanding from those dead Ashes a new Phenix arose, and her building raised in a more stately proportion, especially the Cathedrall dedicas ted to S. Mary, first laid by Bishop Sexwolfe, in Anno 680, fince when it hath beene augmented almost to the Riuer : In the midst of whose Quire, from his many turmoiles resteth the body of King John (the King John. great with-stander of the Popes proceedings) under a Monument of white Marble in Princely Vestures, with his Portraiture thereon according to life. And in the South-fide of the same Quire lieth intombed

uenth, his Monument is all blacke Tette without re membrance of him by Picture. This City is gonerned by two Bailiffes, two Alder- The Magiltrack men, two Chamberlaines, & two Constables yeerely elected out of twenty foure Burgeffes clothed in scarlet, assisted with fortic eight other Citizens, whom they call their Common Counsellers, clad in Purple, a Recorder, Towne-Clerke, and fine Sergeants with Mace their Attendants. Whose Geographicall Position is distant in Longitude from the West-Meridian

18. degrees 10. feruples, hauing the North-Pole ele-uated in Latitude 2. degrees and 3.2. feruples.

(6) Places of further note for memorable antiquitie, is V pton, of great account in the Roman time. where some of their Legions kept, as witnesse their Monies there often found: the admirable Ditch vpon M'gluerne hils, drawne by Gilbert Clare, Earle of Glocefler, to divide his Lands from the Church of Worce fler : the Saxons auguroyner-ace; our Augustines Oke; where he the English Apostle met with the British Bithops for the vniforme celebration of Easter, from whence both parts departed with discontented minds, after many hot words and thwarting disputes.

(7) Neither is it without admiration to me, that many places of this Shire lie farre within the Pre-cincles of other Prouinces, as Aulton, Walbornes, Cuttefden, Paxford, Hanging-Eafton, Northwick, Blockley, Eurlode in Clocefter-fibre, and Goldcote, Aldermerfton, Euriode in Goeegier-Jore, and Goudone ... , Auermerjum, Newbold, Treddenton, Armifoste, Blackwell, Darling-cote, Shipton, Tydminion, Olbarrow, in Warwick-Hire, Dadley in Stafford-five, and Rochford in Hereford-five, whither I must referre the Reader to finde out these

(8) Religious places crected in this Shire, and de-uoted vinto God by deuout perfons, were Briden, Brodlege, Euchholme, Alnecester, Cothell, Fladbury, Mal-uerin, Persport, Stadise, 1991 woods, and Wortester, plentiously produced for, and further secured by many prinileges, both which they abused as were the inditements of all fuch in the daies of King Henry the Eighth, at whole Barre (himselfe being Judge) they were found guilty, and received sentence of their ends and deftruction.

(9) Cafties for defense built in this Countie ruinate, or in strength, were Hartlebury, Holt, Handley, Norton, Elmeley, and Wortester, besides his Maiesties Manour of Tithnell.

(10) This Shires divilion is into feuen Hundreds, wherein are seated ten Market Townes, and one hundred fifty two parish-churches, as in the Table following is expressed. 0 1

Arwick-fbire (fo called from her Shire-towne) is bounded vpon the North with the County of Stafford; vpon

the East, with Watling-streetway is parted from Leicesterfoire, and the rest bordered vpon by Northampton-shire: the South part is butted by Oxford and Glocester-shires; and all her West with the County of Worcester. (2) The forme therof is not much valike to a Seallop-shell, growing from her Western-head, & spreading her body wider, with many indents. The length therof from Newton in the North, to Long Compton in the South, are miles thirty and three: and the brodest part of this Shire, is from Hewell grange in the West, vnto Hill-morton in the East, distant asunder twenty five The length miles, the whole in circumference, about one hundred thirty and fine. (3) This Shire is fited neere vnto the heart of all England, & therfore participates with her in the best both for aire & foile, wanting nothing for profit or pleafure for man, The South part from Auon (that runneth thorow the midft of this County) is called the Felden, as more champion and tractable to bee stirred for corne. which yeerely yeeldeth such plentifull haruest, that the husbandman smileth in beholding his paines, and the medowing pastures with their green mantles so imbrodered with flowers, that from Edg-hill wee may behold another Eden, as Lot did the Plaine of Iordan, be-fore that Sodome fell. The Woodland lieth vpon the The Woodland North of Auon, so called in regard of the plenty of woods:

which now are much thinner by the making of Iron and the foile more churlish to yeeld to the Plough. (4) The ancient people that possessed in the Province, are by Ptolemies description called the Corna viii, wherin after were seated the Mereian-Saxons, a part of whose Kingdome it was, and greatly sought after by the West-Saxons, whose King Cuthred, about the yeere of Christ Iesus, 749. in battle flew Ethelbald at Seckington neere vnto Tamworth. And not farre from thence, King Edward 4. as vnfortunately fought against that front make-king, Richard Neuill Earle of Warwicke: neere vnto which, vpon Blacklow-hill, Pierce Gaueston (that proud and new-raifed Earle of Cornwall) was be-headed by Guy Earle of Warwicke, assisted with the Earles of Lancaster and Hereford. And surely, by the testimonie of tohn Rosse and others, this Countie hath been better replenished with people, who maketh coplaint of whole town-ships depopulations, altogether laid waste by a pursant Armie of feeding Sheepe.

(5) Notwithstanding, many faire Townes it hath and some of them matchable to the most of England The chiefe thereof is Couentree, a City both stately for building, and walled for defense: whose Citizens hauing highly offended their first Lord Leofricke, had their privileges infringed, and themselves oppressed with many heavy Tributes; whose wife Lady Godina pi tying their citates, vnceffantly fued for their peace, and that with fuch importunacie, as hardly could bee faid whether was greater, his hatred, or her loue: at last ouercome with her continuall intercessions, he granted her fuit, vpon an vnciuil; and (as he thought) an vnacceptable condition, which was, that shee should ride naked thorow the face of the City, and that openlie at high noone-day. This notwithstanding she thankfully accepted, and performed the act accordingly enioned : for this Lady Godina stripping herselfe of all rich attire, let loofe the treffes of her faire haire, which on every fide to concred her nakednes, that no part of her body was vnciuill to fight; wherby the redeemed the forme freedoms. & remission of such heavy Tributes. Whose memory I wish may remaine honorable in that City for euer, and her pitie followed by fuch poffessing Ladies. This City had grant to chuse their veerly Magistrates, Major and two Bailiffes, & to build about and embattle a wall, by King Edward 111. whom Henry v1.corpora-ted a County of it felfe, and changed the names of their Bailifs vnto Sherifs: and the wals then were built as they now stand; thorow which open 13. Gates for entrance; besides 18. other Towers thereo for defense. At Gofford Gate in the East hangeth the Shield-bone of a + wilde fore, . Or rather of an Gate in the East nangern the poetra-vone of a * Table Dore, * Or reference of an entry bigger the the greatest One bone, with whose should not be little as a trad talength. flaine by the famous Guy, if we will beleeue report.

(6) Next vnto this City, in account and commerce, is Warwicke, vpon the North-well Banke of Auon built by Gurgunftus the fon of Beline, as John Roffe Manke of the place faith, 375. yeres before the birth of Christ: by Nineus called Caer-Guarnic and Caer-Leon ; by the Saxons; Wappýng-wýc ; and by learned Cambden iudged to bee PRAESIDIVM, the Roman Garrisons Towne. The situation of this place is most pleasant upon a hil rising fro the River, ouer which is a strong & faire Stone-bridge, & her sharp streame vpon the towne side checked with a most sumptuous & stately Cafle, the decaies whereof, with great cost & curious buildings, the right worthy me-ward I do acknowledge, in letting this had free fro the daily imploimers of a manuall trade, & giving itfull liberty thus to expresse the inclination of my mind himfelfe being the Procurer of my prefent estate.

It seemeth this Towne hath been walled about, as appeareth by the Trench in some places scene, and two very faire Gates, whose passages are hewed out of the Rocke, as all other into the Towne are: ouer whom two beautifull Chapels are built; that towards the East cal-

Knight Sir Foulke Griuell (in whose perso shineth al true vertue & high nobilitie)hath repaired: whose merits to

led S. Peters, and that on the South-well S. I ames. Two faire Churches are therein feated, called Saint Maries, and S. Nicolas : but these in, and about the Towne suppressed, S. Laurence. S. Michaels, I ohn Baptist & Iohn of Ieru/alem, befide the Nunnery in the North of the Towne: whole North Pole is elevated in Latitude 5 2 degrees & 45 minutes, & is feated fro the first point 12 degrees & 4.5 minutes, & is leated fro the first point in the West of Longitude, 18 degrees & 4.5 minutes, being yearely gouerned by a Baisiffe, twelve Breistren, twenty foure Burgesfee for Common Compill, 3 Recorder, a Towne-clerke, and one Sergeant their Attendant.

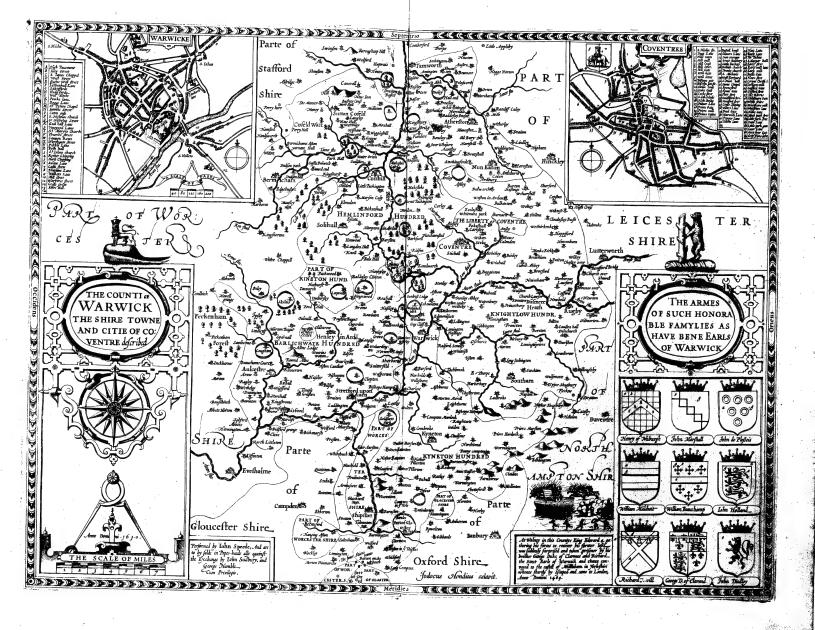

(7) Places of most memorable note observed in this Shire, are Shugbury, where the pretious from Aftroites is found: Of-Church, which was the Palace of great Offa is round: 07-commen, without was the Palace of S. Fremund his fonne: Cheflerton, where the famous Fossers way is feene. At Learnington, so farre from the Sea, a Spring of Saltwater boileth vp : and at Newenham Regis most souc-raigne water against the Stone, Greene wounds, Vicers, & Impostumes; and drunke with Salt looseth, but with fugar bindeth the body; and turneth wood into stone. as my selfe saw by many sticks that therin were fallen, some part of them Ash, and some part of them Stone: and Guy-cliffe, where the famous Earle Guy, after many painfull exploits atchieued, retired, and vnknowne John Rolls. lead an Hermites life, and was lastly there buried.

(8) The chiefest commodities in this County grow ing, are corne, wherof the Red-berfe V ale yeeldeth most abundantly; wools in great plenty; woods and iron, though the producer of the one wilbe the deftruction of the other.

Such honourable Families as have beene dignified with the Earledone of this Shire-towner name fince the Normans Conquest, in the Mappe it selfe are inserted, and by their several names expressed.

This County is strengthned with eight strong Ca-

fles, traded with fifteene Market-townes, inriched with many faire buildings, and by the deuotion of many Nobles, had many foundations of religious Monaferies Nobles, had many tounoastous or resigous Monagerest therein had. The chiefest were at Stoneley, warniske, Theshigford, Rocholl, Balfoull, Killingworth, Commirce, Combic, Nam-cason, Alpy, Atherfon, and Pallefuneths had which came to their period in the taigne of K. Hornie VIII. when their trich Reuenews were alienated to the company of the third of the third of the company of the his vie, and those stately buildings either overturned or bestowed vpon his Courtiers: but yet to Gods glorie, and his divine fertrice, one hundred fifty eight parith-churches therein remaine, dispersedly seated in the nine Hundreds of this Shires division.

by the water Nene: her South is bounded with Buckingham and Oxfordfbires, and the West from Warwicke with Watling freetway, Auon, and Weland, is divided from Leicefter faire.

(2) The forme of this County is large and narrow, broadest in the fouth-west; and thence shooting ftill leffer like vnto a Horne, nor not much vnlike to the forme of Cornwall: and from the entrance of Cherwell into this Shire, vnto the fall of Weland and Nene necre vnto Crowland, are by measure forty fix The circumfemiles; and the broadest part is from Ouse vnto Auon. which is not fully twenty: the whole in circumference one hundred and nineteene miles.

(3) The aire is good, temperate, and healthfull: the foile is champion, rich, and fruitfull, and fo plenteoufly peopled, that from fome Ascents, thirty Parith-Churches, and many more Windmilles at one view may bee feene : notwithstanding the simple and gentle sheepe, of all creatures the most harme leffe, are now become so rauenous, that they begin to denoure men, wafte fields, & depopulate houses if not whole towne-ships, as one merily hath written (4) The ancient people knowne to the Romans, and recorded by Ptolemie, were the Coritani, who pos-

fessed this Countie, and were branched further thorow Leicester, Lincolne, Nottingham, Rutland, and Darbie-shires: these joining with the Icenians, with them were fettered with the chaines of subjection, when for Claudius, Publius Oftorius Scapula entred his Licutenantship in Britaine, and in battle subdued all betwixt the rivers Nene and Sabrina. But when the Romans were content to let goe that which so long was desired, and had coft so much in the getting, the Saxons, a most warlike Nation, put into these parts, and made it a portion of their Mercian Kingdome : but their gouernmentalfo growne out of date, the Normans feated themselues in these faire possessions, the branches of whose Stemmes are spreadabroad in these parts, most fruitfull and faire, (5) Commodities arifing in this Shire, are chiefly gotten by tillage and plough, whereby corne so plentifully aboundeth, that in no other Countie is found more, or so much : the pastures and woods are filled with cattle and enery where sheepe loaden with their fleeces of wooll.

(6) The chiefe Towne in this Shire is Northampton, whereof the County taketh name, which for circuit, beautie, and building, may be ranked with the most of the Cities of our Land. It is seated at the meeting and confluence of two Rivers, the greater whereof beareth to name New. This Towne hath beene built all of stone, as by many foundations remaining to this day is scene, and is walled about both ftrong and high, excepting the West, which is defended by a River parted into many streames. In the depredations of the Danes, Suen their King fet this Henr. Hout. Towne on fire, and afterwards it was forely affaulted by the disobedient Barons of King John, who named themselves The Armie of God: but the loyaltie of this Towne flood nothing fo fure vnto King Henry his fonne, whence the Barons with displaced Banners founded the Battle against their Soueraigne. And yet after this a wofull Field of Englands civill division was fought, whence Richard Neuil the floor Earle of Warnieke, lead away prisoner that unfortunate man King Henry the fixth. Vpon the West part of this Towne standerha large Castle, mounted vpon an hill, whose aged countenance well sheweth the beau-

tie that she hath borne, and whose gaping thinkes doe

daily threaten the downefall of her walles. To this

vpon the South the Townes wall adjoineth, and in a round circuit meeteth the River in the North, extending in compasse two thousand one hundred and twenty pales: whose site so pleased the Students of Cambridge, that hither they remooued themselues An.D.1261; vpon the Kings Warrant, in minde to haue made it an Vniuersitie: from whence the North-pole is eleuated 52. degrees 36. scruples for Latitude, and in Longitude is remooued from the West 19. degrees and 40. scruples; being yeerely gouerned by a Maior, two Bailiffes, twelue Magistrares, a Recorder, Towns-Clerke, a Common-Counfell of fortie eight Burges fes, with fine Screeants to execute bufineffe. (7) But the denotions of the Saxon-Kings made where Wolphere King of Mercia beganne a most statelie Monasterie to the honour of S. Peter, for latisfaction of the bloud of his two sonnes, whom he had murdered in case of Christianitie: but himselfe being for the like made away by his mother, his brother Penda continued the worke, with the assistance of his brother Ethelred, and two lifters Kineburga and Kinefwith. This among the Danish Defolations was cast downe; yet was it againe restored to greater beauty by Ethelwold Bishop of Winchester, with the helpe of King Edgar, and of Adulph his Chancellour, who vpon pricke of conscience, that in bed with his wife had ouerlaid and smoothered an infant their onely sonne, laid all his wealth vpon the reedifying of the place, and then became Abbat thereof himselfe. The Cathedrall is most beautifull and magnificall, where, in the Quire lie interred two vnfortunate Queenes : on the North fide Catharine Dowager of Spaine, the repudiate wife of King Henry the eighth, under an Hearse coursed ger of Spaine. with blacke Saye, having a white Croffe in the midft: and on the fouth-fide, Mary Queene of Stotland, whose Hearse is spread ouer with blacke velues. The Cloister is large, and in the glasse-windowes very cu-riously portraied the Historie of Wolphere the Founder, whose Royall Seat was at Wedon in the street conuerted into a Monasterie by Saint Werburg his holy daughter, and had beene the Roman Station, by Antonine the Emperour called Bannauenna, So likewife Norman-chester was the ancient City Durobrinae, where their Souldiers kept, as by the Monies there daily found is most apparant.

(8) Houses of Religion deuoted to Gods Scruice by the pious intents of their wel-meaning Founders were at Peterborow, Peakirk, Pipewell, Higham, dets were at Peterboon, Peatre, repeate, ingam, Damitre, Sabh, Salfenber, Sewardelge, Gare, Saint Devry, Saint Michell, Luffeild, Cateby, Bruch, Barkley, Finfload, Fathinghey, weden, and Withref, befiles them in Northampton, all which felt the flormes of their owne destruction that raged against them in the raigne of King Henry the eighth, who dispersed their Reuenewes to his owne Coffers and Courtiers, and pulled the stones asunder of their feeming euer-fure Foundations; and in the time of young Edward, his fonne, whose minde was free King kaward rom wronging the dead, the Tombes of his owne Predecessours were not spared, when as Edward flaine Haward. at Agincourt, and Richard at Wakefeild, both of them Dukes of Yorke, were after death affaulted with the weapons of destruction, that cast downe their most faire Monuments in the Collegiate Church of Fother ringhay Castle.

(9) Eight princely Families have enioted the Ti-tle of the Earledome of Northampton, whereof the laft, Henry Haward now Lord Prime Seale, a most honourable Patron to all learned proceedings (that I may acknowledge my dutifull and humble feruice) hath most honourablie assisted and set forward these my endeuours.

(10) This Shires division, for service to the Crowne, and imploiments of businesses, is into twentie Hundreds, hath beene strengthned with ten Caftles, and is ftill traded with ten Market-Townes, and God honoured in three hundred twenty fix Parish-Churches.

(2) The forme thereof is round, and no larger in compasse then a light horseman can easily ride about in a day : vpon which occasion some will haue the Shire named of one Rut, that forode. But others from the rednesse of the soile, will have it called Rutland; and so the old English-Saxons called it, for that Roet and Rud is in their tongue Red with vs, and may very well giue the name to this Prouince, seeing the earth doth staine the wooll of her sheepe into a reddish colour. Neither is it strange that the staine of the Many places na. foile gives names vnto places, and that very many: ture of their foile. for have we not in Cheffe-fhire the Red Rocke; in Lancafbire the Red Banke; and in Wales Rutland Caftle? to speake nothing of that famous Red Sea which shooteth into the Land betwixt Errot and Arabia, which gaue backe her waters for the Ifraelites to paffe on foot : all of them named from the colour of the foile. (3) The longest part of this Shire is from Caldecot in the South vpon the River Ey, vnto Thifleton a small village seated in her North, not fully twelue miles; and from Timwell Eastward, to Wissender in the West, her broadest extant, is hardly nine: the whole circumference about forty miles.

(4) The aire is good both for health and delight, Subject to neither extremitie of heat nor cold, nor is greatly troubled with foggie mifts.

The foile is rich, and for corne and tillage gives place vnto none. Woods there are plenty, and many of them imparked, hilles feeding heards of Neat, and flockes of sheepe; vallies besprinkled with many fweet springs, Graine in abundance, and pastures not wanting: in a word, all things ministred to the content of life, with a liberall heart and open hand. Only this is objected, that the circuit is not great.
(5) The draught whereof, that I may acknowledge my duty and his right, I received at the hands of the right honourable Iohn Lord Harrington, Baron of Exton, done by himselfe in his younger yeeres. Neere vnto his house Eurley, standeth Okham a faire

Officer toyalty. Market Towne, which Lordship the said Baron enjoieth, with a Royaltic somewhat extraordinary, which is this: If any Noble by birth come within the pre-cinct of the same Lordship, hee shall forfeit as an homage a shoot from the horse whereon hee rideth, vnleffe he redeeme it at a price with money. In witneffe whereof, there are many horse-shooes nailed vpon the Shire Hall doore, some of large size and ancient fashion, others new and of our present Nobilitie; whose names are thereupon stamped as followeth.

belides many others without names. That fuch homage was his due, the faid Lord himselfe told me; and at that instant a suit depended in Livalia. Law against the Earle of Lincolne, who refused to forfeit the penaltie, or to pay his fine.

(6) Her ancient Inhabitants knowne to the Romans, and mentioned in Ptolemie, were the Coritani. and by him branched thorow Leicester, Lincolne, Not tingham, Darby-shire, and this; who with the Icenians were subdued by P.Ostorius under the yoke of Claudius the Roman Emperour : and at their departure, by conquest the Saxons made it a Province vnto their Mercian Kingdome, whose fortunes likewise comming to a full period, the Normans annexed it under their

(7) This County King Edward Confessor bequeathed by his Testament vnto Queene Eadgith his wife, and after her decease, vnto his Monasterie at westmin fler, which William the Conquerour cancelled and made void, bestowing the Lands upon others, the tithes and the Church vnto those Monkes.

That the Ferrers heere first seated, besides the credit of Writers, the horseshooe, whose badge then it was, doth witnesse, where in the Castle, and now the Shire-hall, right ouer the Seat of the Judge, a Horse shooe of iron curiously wrought, containing fine foot and a halfe in length, and the bredth thereto propor-tionably is fixed. The Castle hath beene strong, but now is decaied, the Church faire, and the Towne spacious; whose degree of Longitude is 1 9. 46.scruples. and the North-poles elevation in latitude 53. degrees and 7 minutes.

(8) Let it not seeme offensiue, that I (to fill vp this little Shire) have inferted the feat of a Towne not fited in this County; for belides the conveniencie of place, the circuit and beauty, but especially it being for a time a Vniuerlitie, did mooue much, yea and the first in this Iland, if John Hardings " Authour faile him not, that will have Bladed to bring from Athens certaine Philosophers whom here he seated, and made publike profession of the Liberall Sciences, where (as he faith) a great number of Scholars studied the Arts, and so continued a Vniversitie vnto the comming of Augustine, at which time the Bishop of Rome interdicted it; for certaine Heresis sprung vp among the Britaines and Saxons. But most true it is, that in the raigne of King Edward the Third, vpon de-bate falling betwixt the Southerne and Northerne Students at Oxford, many Schoolemen with-drew themselves hither, and a while professed, and named a College, according to one in Oxford, Brafennofe, which retaineth that name vnto this day. This was fo great a skarre viito the other, that when they were recalled by Proclamation to Oxford, it was prouided by

Oath, that no Student in Oxford, to the protudice of or reade the Arts at Student, to the protudice of Oxford.

(9) As this Shire is the leaft in circuit, to is it with the feweft Market-townes replenished, having onely two. And from Societies that fed vpon the labours of others, was this Land the freeft : for belides Ribell. where Tibbs the Falconers Goddesse was worshipped for a Saint, when superfittion had well-necre put Gods true honour out of place, I finde very few; neither with more Castles strengthned then that at okham, whose raines shew that a Castle hath beene Eicester-shire(lying borde-red vpon the North with Nottingham-fore, vpon the East, with Lincolne and Rationd, vpon the South with Northampton-shire, & vpon the West with Watlingstreet way is parted fro Warwick-shire, the rest being boundedwith the confines of Darby)is a countrey Champion, abounding in corne, but spary of woods, especially in the south and eaft parts, which are supplied with pit-coales plente-ously gotten in the North of this Province, & with a-bundance of cattle bred in the hils beyond the River Wreak, which is nothing so well inhabited as the rest.

(2) The Aire is gentle, milde and temperate, and giveth appertie both to labour and reft, wholfome it is, and draweth Mans life to a long-age, and that much without ficknesse; at Carleton only some defect of pronunciation appeareth in their speech.

(3) The soile thus consisting, the commodities are raised accordingly of Corne, Cattle and Coales; and in the Rockes neere Beuer are sometimes found the Afroites , the Starre-like precious Stone.

(4) The ancient people that inhabited this county were the Coritani, who were spread further into other Shires, but after that the Romans had left the land to it felf, this with many more fel to be vnder the Pofsession and Gouernment of the Mercians and their kings, from whom the English injoyeth it at this day.

(5) In Circular wife (almost) the compasse of this Shire is drawne indifferently spacious, but not verie thicke of In-clofures, being from Eaft to Weft in the broadest part not fully 30, miles, and from North to South but twenty foure, the whole CircumfetemperCitiente Center of the shore. Ethelred the Mercian Monarch made it an Episcopall Sea in the yeere of Christ Iesus 680. Wherein exwulph of his election became the first Bishop : Which fhortly after was thence translated, and therewith the beauty of the Town began to decay; vpon whose de-folations that creekifying Lady Edelfted cast her cies of compassion, and both reedified the buildings & compassed it about with a strong wal, where, in short time the cities trade so increased, that Matthew Paris in his lesser to the canee, that reastron z we will the lesser story reportest as followeth. Lege-sesser (faith he) is a right wealth City, and notably desended; and had the wall a sure foundation, were inseriour to no Citie what-

The wall a jure journalism, were injerious to no citie unni-foeuer. But this pride of prosperity long lasted not vn-der the Normans, for it was fore oppressed with a world of calamities, when Robert Bossu the Crouchbacke Earl of that Province, rebelled against his Soue-raigne Lord King Henry the second: Whereof heare the fame author Paris speake. Through the oblimate shubbornnesse of Earle Robert (faith he) the noble Citic Leicester was besieged and thround down by King Benry, and the walt hat seemed indesselbable, was vitery raced went to the Ground. The peeces of whose fragments so fallen downe remained in his daies like to hard Rockes, through the strength of the Morter Cementing whole lumps together; and at the Kings command the citie was fet on fire and burnt, the Castle raced, and a heavy imposition laid vpon the Citizens, who with great fummes of money bought their owne Banishgreat tummes of money bought their owne bantan-ments: but were fo yield in their departure, that for extreame feare many of them tooke Sanchuary both at S. Edmunds and S. Albanes. In repentance of these mischiefes the Authour therof, Earle Robert, built the Monastery of S. Mary de Pratis, wherein himselfe be-came a Canon regular, and for fifteene yeeres continuance in fad laments ferued God in continual prais ers: with the like deuotion Henry the first Duke of Lancaster built an hospitall for an hundred and tenne poore people, with a Collegiate Church, a Deane, twelue Canons Prebendaries, as many vicars, fuffici ently protided for with reuenewes, wherein himfelfe lieth buried, and it was the greatest ornament of that citie, vntil the hand of K. Henry the eighth lay out? heavy vpon all the like foundations, and laid their aspired Tops at his own feete.

The fortunes of another Cronch-backe (King Ri- King Richard the thard the viurper) were no leffe remarkable in this citie then the former Robert was, both of them in like degree of dishonorable course of life, though of differentiffue at their deaths, the one dying penitent and of deuout effecme, the other leaving the stench of Tyranny to affice, the Otter reaming the tenent of Tyranny to all following ages; who from this citie fetting forth in one day with great pompe & in battle aray to keep the crowne fure upon his owne He.met, in a fore fought field, yeelded both it and his life, wnto the head, & hands of Henry of Richmond his Conqueror : and the next day was brought back like a Hogge ror: and the next cay was brought back like a Hogge naked and tome, and with contemp without tenters obGardy buried in the Gray-friers of this icitic whole dipperedion hat flipperedid the Biot-place of his Grane, and only the Soone-cheft wherein he was laid (a drinking rough now for Horiesi na Gomo Lnue). retaineth the memory of that great Monarchs Funerall: and so did a stone in the church and chapell of S. Maries, inclose the corps of the proud and pontifi-call Cardinall Wolfey, who had prepared for himself, as was faid, a far more richer Monument.

(7) Other places worthy of remembrance in this Shire were these: In the west, where a high crosse was erected, in former times stoode the faire city Cleycefter, the Romans BENONNES, where their Legions lay, and where their two principall waies croffed each others, as the Inhabitants report; Longhborrow in Marianus See the north-verge, which the Saxons called Leizanbupge, was (as Marianus affirmeth) taken from the Britaines by Cuthwolfe their King, about the yeere of Christ,

LINCOLN-SHIRE.

CHAPTER X XXIII.

Book.1.

The aire.

The forme.

The foile.

Ic Countie of Lincolne by the English Saxons called Lincollycype, and by the Normans Nicolshire, is confined on the North with Humber, on the East with the German Ocean, vpon the South is parted from Cambridge and Nor-thamptonshire by the Ri-uer Nyne, and on the West from Not tingham and Yorkfbires by Dun and Trent.

(2) The length of this Province extended from Barton vpon Humber in the North, vnto Stanford vpon the River Nyne in the South, are miles by our Englifb measure fiftic five, and the bredth thereof from Newton in the West, stretched vnto Winthrop vpon her Eaft Sea, containeth 35. The whole in circumference about one hundred and eighty miles.

(3) The Aire vpon the Eaft and South part is both thickeand foggie, by reason of the Fennesand vnsolute grounds, but therewithall very moderate and pleasing. Her graduation being remooued from the Equator to the degree of 53, and the windes that are fent of her still working Seas do disperse those vapors from all power of thurs.

(4) The forme of this Countie doth somewhat resemble the body of a Lute, whose East coasts lie bowe-like into the German Ocean, all along peftered with inlets of falt waters and fands, which are neither firme nor fafe for trauellers, as those in the South proned with King I o H, who marching North-ward from Northfolke against his disloyall Barons, ypon those washes lost all his furniture and carriage by the fudden returne of the Sea, and foftnesse of the sands. (5) Her Soile vpon the West and North is abundantly fertile, pleafant, and rich, flored with pafturage, arable and meadowing grounds: the Eaft and South fenny and brackish, and for corne barren, but for fowle and fish exceeding any other in the Realm; wherein, at some times and season of the yeere, hath been taken in nets in August at one draught, aboue three thousand Mallards, and other fowles of the like

(6) The Shires commodities confift chiefly in Corne, Cattell, Fish, Fowle, Flax, & Alablaster; as also in a Plaister much esteemed of by the Romans for their works of Imageric; and whereof Plinie in his naturall Works of infagrate, and whereor rame in its natural History maketh mention. And the Afroises, a preci-ous stone star-like, pointed with fine beames or raies, anciently esteemed for their vertue in victories, vpon the South-west of this County neere Bener are found: not far thence in our Fathers memory, at Harlaxton. was ploughed vp a brasen vessell, wherein was inclofed a golden Helmer, of an ancient fashion, set with precious stones, which was presented to Kathren of spaine, Wife and Dowager to King Henry the eight.

(7) This Shire triumpheth in the births of Beau-cleark King Henry the First, whom Selby brought foorth, and of King Henry the Fourth at Bulling broke born: but may as inftly lament for the death of King John heerein poisoned by Simon a Monke of Swynfted Abby; and of Queene Eleanor, wife to King Edward the First, the mirrour of wedlocke, and loue to the Commons, who at Hardby, neere Bullingbroke his birthplace, ended her life.

Very ancient it is, and hath beene more magnificall, as by her many outerturned ruines doth appeare; and farre more populous, as by Domes dates booke is seene, where it is recorded that this Citie contained a thousand and seuen mansions, and nine hundred Burgeffes, with twelue Lage-men, hauing Sac and Soc. And in the Normans time, faith Malmesbury, it was one of the best peopled Cities of England, being a place for trafficke of Merchandize for all commers by Land or Sea. Heerein King Edward the Third ordained his Staple for the Mart of Wools, Leather, and Lead; and no leffethen fiftie Parish-Churches did beautifie the same: but now containeth only fifteene, besides the Cathedrall. Some ruines yet remaine both of Frieries and Nunneries, who lie now buried in their owneashes, and the Cirie conquered, not by war, but by time and very age: and yet hath she not escaped the calamitie of sword, as in the time of the Saxons, whence Arthur enforced their Host: the like also did Edmund to the destroying An.Do.516.

(5) More South in this Shire at Stoke, in the Raigne of King Henry the seventh, a great battell was fought by Iohn De-lapole Earle of Lincoln, which Ri-chard the Viurper had declared his Heire apparant; but Richard losing his life, and De-lapole his hopes in seeking here to set up a Lambert, fell downe himselse: and at Newarke after many troubles King Iohn got his peace with the end of his life.

(6) Trade and commerce for the Countries pro-uifion is frequented in eight market Townes in this Shire, whereof Nottingham is both the greatest and best:a Towne seated most pleasant and delicate vpon a high Hill, for buildings stately and number of saire Streets surpassing and surmounting many other Cities, and for a spatious and most faire market place doth compare with the best, many strange vaults hewed out of the rocks in this Towne are seene, and those under the Castle of an especial note, one for the those vited the Called of an especial note, one for the fory of Chrift his pallion engrauen in the Walls, and cut by the hand of Dauid the fecond King of Scots, whilft he was therein detailed Prifoner: Another Henry He wherein Lord Mortimer was surprised in the Non-age of King Edmard the third, ever since bearing the name of Mortimers hole; these haue their staires and seuerali roomes made artificiallie euen out of the rocks: as also in that Hill are dwelling houses with winding staires, windowes, chimneles and roome aboue roome

The Callle is frong, and was kept by the Danes against Burthred, Ethelred and Elfred the Mercian and Weft-Saxons Kings, who together laid their fiege against it: and for the further thrength of the Towne King. Edward firmamed the Elder walled it about, where from part as yet remaines from the Caffle to the West-gate, and thence the foundation may be perceived to the North, where in the midst of the way ranging with this Banke, stands a Gate of Stone; and the same Tract passing along the North part may well be perceived: the reft to the Ri-uer and thence to the Castle are built upon, and thereby buried from fight: whose Circuit, as I tooke it, extendeth two thousand one hundred and twentie (7) In the warres betwixt Stephen and Mand the Empresse, by Robert Earle of Glousester these walls estate hath since increased in beauty and wealth, and at this day is governed by a Maior and fix Aldermen clad in skarlet, two Sheriffes, two Chamberlaines, a towne-Clerke, and fix Sergeants with Maces their at-tenders: whose position hath the pole eleuated fifty three degrees, 25 minutes in Latitude, and hath the Meridian nine degrees and 25 minutes. This Towne hath been honored by these Princes titles, and these Princes dignified with the Earledome of Nottingham whose several Armes in the Card it selfe is inserted to sight. Religious houses that have been erected and now suppressed in the compasse of this County, chiefly were Newsseath, Leuton, Shelford, Southwell, Thurgarton, Blith, Welbeck and Radford; in Nottingham, the White and Gray Friers, besides a little Chapell de-dicated to Saint John. All which shew the deuotions of those former times; which their remembrance may moue, if not condemne vs, that have more knowledge

(2) It is in forme somewhat triangle, though not of any equall distance, growing from her narrow South-point still wider, and in the North is at the broadest : for from Stretton neere the head of Mele, to New-Chapellscated neere the head of Derwent, the two extremes from North to South are thirtie eight miles: but from the Shire-Oakes vato the meeting of Merfey and Goyt, the broadest part of all this Shire, is not fully twenty nine; the whole in circumference extendeth to an hundred and thirty miles.

(3) The aire is good, and very healthfull : the foile is rich, especially in her South and East parts: but in the North and West is hilly, with a blacke and mossie ground, both of them fait-handed, to the Ploughers paines, though very liberall in her other gifts : whose natures thus diffenting, the River Derwent doth divide afunder, that taketh course thorow the heart or midst of this County.

(4) The ancient people that possessed these parts in the times of the Romans affaults, were the Coritani, whom Ptolemie disperseth thorow Northampton, Leicefter, Rutland, Lincolne, Nottingham, and this Shire, who were all of them subdued by P. Ostorius Scapula, Lieutenant in this Prouince for Claudius the Emperour. But Romes Empire failing in Britaine, by the intestine warres among themselues, the Saxons (a more sauage and searefull Nation) soone brought it vnder their fubiection, and made this a Prouince vnto their Mercians Kingdome, whom the West-Saxons first wanne, and againe lost to the Normans.

(5) It is stored with many commodities, and them of much worth; for belides woods and carrie. there and corne, every where over-fpreading the face of this County, the Mill-flowe, Cryfall, and Allablafter; the Mines of Pit-coale, Iron, and Lead, are of great price: whereof the last is mentioned in Pliny, who writeth, that in Britaine in the very crust of the Will Willett, that in Britaine in the very crust of the ground, without any deepe digging, is gotten fogreat flore of Lead, that there is a Law expressy made of purpose, for-bidding men to make more then to a certaine slime. Whose stones are plenteously gotten in those Mountaines, and melted into Sowes, to no finall profit of the Countrey. There is found also in certaine veines of the earth, Stibium, which the Apothecaries call Antimo mium, and the Alchymifts hold in great efteeme.

(6) Places for Commerce, or memorable note the first is Darby the Shire-Towne, called in the English Saxon Tongue Nopolywopubis, and by the Danes Devraby, feated upon the West banke of Derwent, where also a small Brooke rising Westward, runneth thorow the Towne vnder nine Bridges, before it meets with her farre greater Riuer Derwest, which presentlie it doth, after the hath paffed Tenant Bridge in the South-East of the Towne. But a Bridge of more beautie, Marier baidon. built all of Free-Stone, is passed over Derwent in the North-eaft of the Towne, whereon flandeth a faire stone Chapell, and both of them bearing the names of Saint Maries : fine other Churches are in this Towne, the chiefest whereof is called Alballow whose Steeple or Bell-Tower being both beautiful and high, was built only at the charges of young men and maids, as is witneffed by the infeription cut in the same upon every square of the Steeple. Among the miserable desolations of the Danes, this Towne bare a part, but by Lady Ethelfleda was againe repaired, and is at this day incorporated with the yeerely government of two Bailiffes elect out of twenty foure brethren, besides as many Burgesses of Common Counfell, a Recorder, Towne-Clerke, and two Sergeants with Mate: whose Graduation is observed from the Equa tor to be 53. degrees 25. scruples, and from the first point in the West, 19. degrees 2. scruples.

(7) Little-Chefter (by the Romifh Money there dai- Little Chefter: lie found) feemeth to have beene ancient, and that a Colonie of the Roman Souldiers there lay. Yet of farre greater fame was Repandunum, now Repton, where Eshelbald the ninth King of the Mercians, and fifteenth Monarch of the Englishmen, flaine at Seggefwald by the treason of his Subjects, was interred; and whence Burthred, the last King of that people, was expulsed with his Queene Ethelfwith, by the rage of the Danes, after twenty two yeeres raigne. But with a more plea fing cie we may behold Melborne, the memoriall of Englishmens great valour, where in that Castle was kept Priloner John Duke of Burbon, taken Captiuc in the Battle of Agincourt, and therin detained the space of nineteene yeeres,

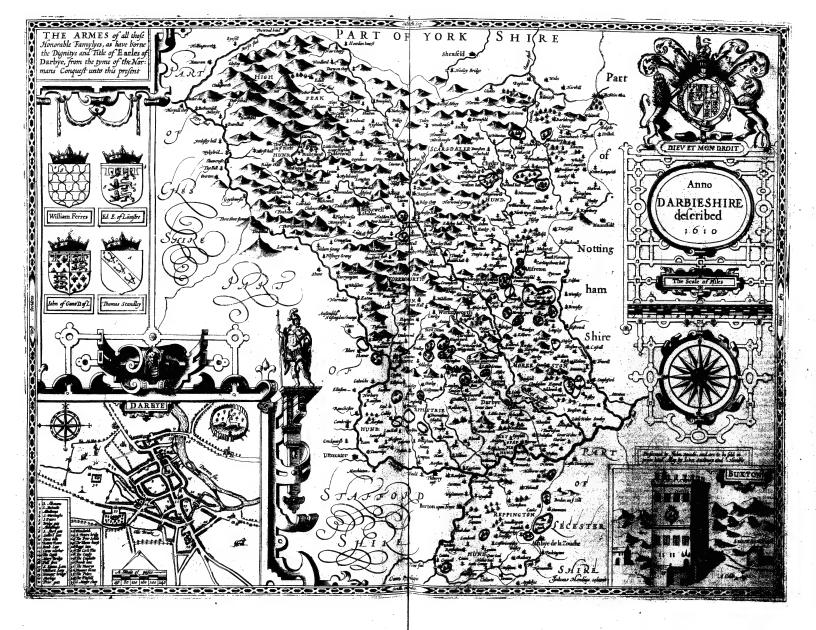

(8) Things of stranger note are the hot Wateriprings, bursting foorth of the ground at Buxtone, Buston well, where out of the Rocke within the compasse of eight yards, nine springs arise, eight of them warme, but the ninth very cold. These run from vnder a faire square building of free-stone, and about threescore paces off, receive another hot spring from a Well, in-closed with source flat stones, called S. Annes; neere vnto which another very cold spring bubled vp. The report goeth among the by-dwellers, that great cures by these waters have beene done : but daily experiby their waters must been could be the construction of the flomacke, and finewes, and very pleafant to bathe the body in.

Not farre thence is Elden hole, whereof firange things haue beene told, and this is confidently affirmed, the waters that trickle from the toppe of that Caue, (which indeed is very spacious, but of a low and narrowentrance) doe congeale into ftone, and hang as ickles in the roof. Some of them were shewed at my being there, which like vnto fuch as the frost cogealeth were hollow within, and grew Taper-wife towards their points, very white, and fomewhat Crystall-like. And feuen miles thence, vpou a mounted hill, frandeth a Caftle, under which there is a hole or Cauc commonly called The Dinels Arfe in the Peake, where-of Gernafe of Tilbury hath cold many prety tales, and others doe make it one of the wonders of our Lind. (9) As in other Counties the denotions of the religious haue beene made apparem in the erection of places for Gods peculiar fervice; so in this haue been founded eight of that nature, which were Dale, Deretounded eight of that nature, which were Dad, Densell, and Pallwarks whole pace and plenty Road facult of Pallwarks whole pace and plenty froat facult from all danger, all the blothering windes ariting in the raigue of King Henry the Eighth, bleve of the sinacles of their beautions buildings, and fhooke disnote the Researces of those Foundations which never the Researces of the Researce of the Researce

STAFFORDSHIRE.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

Book. 1

The ancient

name of this Shire.

The confines

The forme and

Ten Riuers.

TAFFORD-SHIRE. which in the English-Saxon is written διεκκορο-γεύρα & whose situation is much about the middle of England, meeteth vpon the North with Chef-shire and Darby, and that in a Triangle point, where three stones are pitched for the bounds of these Shires; it is parted from Darby-shire on the East with Dowe and with Trent ; the South is confined with Warwicke and Worcester-Spires, and the West butteth against the County of Shropshire.

(2) The forme thereof is somewhat lozeng-like. that is, sharpe at both ends, and broadest in the midst The length extending from North to South, is by measure forty foure miles; and the bredth from East to West, twenty seuen; the whole in circumference one hundred and forty miles.

(3) The aire is good, and very healthfull, though ouer-sharpe in her North and Moreland, where the The Aire. The Soile fnow lieth long, and the winde bloweth cold.

(4) The foile in that part is barren of Corne, because her Hilles and Mores are no friends vnto Til. lage: the middle is more leuel, but therwithall wooddie, as well witnesset that great one, called the Cank.
But the South is most plenteous in Corne and Pastu-

(5) Her ancient Inhabitants were the * C O R CORNAVII NAVII, whom Ptolemie placeth in the Tract that containeth Shropfhire, Worcester-shire, Chesse-shire, and this: all which were possessed by the Mercian-Saxons when their Heptarchie flourished. And Tameworth in this Shire was then held their Kings Court. The Danes after them often affaied herein to have feated, as witneffeth Tetnall, then Theoten hall, by interpretation, The habitation of Pagans, imbrued with their bloud by King Edward the elder. But the Inhabitants An.Do.911 of this Province Beda termes The midland Englishmer because to his seeming it lay in the heart of the Land, which when the Normans had made Conquest of all, many of them fet downe their rest here, whose posterities at this day are fairely and further branched into other parts. The Commodities of this Countie confift chiefly in Corne, Cattle, Alablaster, Woods and Iron, (if the one prooue not the destruction of the other) Pit-coale, Flesh, and Fish, whereof the Riuer Trent is faid to swarme : and others arising and running thosow this Shire, doe so batten the ground, that the Medowes even in the midst of Winter grow greene; fuch are Dowe, Manifold, Churnet, Hunfye, Yenden, Teane, Blith, Trent, Tyne, and Some; whercof Trent is not onlie the principall, but in esteeme accounted the third of this Land.

Stafford the chiefe Towne. Isb.Capgrane. (7) Stafford the Shire-towne, anciently Betheney rom Bertelina reputed holy man that therein lead an Hermits life, was built by King Edward the elder, in-King John. corporated by King Iohn, and vpon the East & South parts was walled and trenched by the Barons of the place; the rest from East to North was secured by a large Poole of water, which now is become faire meadow grounds. The tract and circuit of these walles extendeth to twelve hundred and forty paies, thorow which, foure Gates into the foure windes have pasfage, the Riucr some running on the South and West of the Towne. King Edward the fixth did incorporate the Burgesses, and gaue them a perpetuall successive. ion, whose government is vnder two Baileffes veerely elected out of one and twenty Alsinanis, allies to Common Counfell, a Recorder, whereof the Dukes of Buckingham have borne the Office, and as yet is kept the second of the American they hold Plea without control of the Control of t elected out of one and twenty Assistants, called the a Court of Record, wherein they hold Plea without limitation of summe; a Towne-Clerke also, (from whose pen I received these instructions) and to attend them, two Sergeants at Mace. This Towne is fited in the degree of Latitude 5 3.2 o.scruples, and of Longitude 18 and 40 fcruples,

(8) But Leichfield, more large and of farre greater fame, is much her ancient, knowne vnto Beds by the name of Leichfeld, which Rosse doth interpret to be The feldof dead bodies, for the number of Saints vnder the rage of Dioclesian there slaine: vpon which cause the Citie beareth for her Armes an Escocheon of Landskip, with divers Martyrs in divers maner massacred. Here Ofwin King of Northumberland ouercomcreu. Fiere Open King of Northemberland ouercom-ming the Pagan-Mercians, built a Church, and made it the See of Duins the Billiop; whole fucceflours grownerich, with golden realons to ouercame King offa, and he Adrian the Pope, that an Archiepiscopall Pale was granted Bishop Endulph, to the great differace of Lambert Arch-Bishop of Canterbury. In this church were interred the bodies of Walfhere and Celred, both An.Do.676. of them Kings of the Mercians. But when the minds of men were fet altogether vpon gorgeous building, this old foundation was new reared by Roger Clinton, An. Do. 718. Bishop of this See, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary at Saint Chad, and the Clofe inwalled by Biftop Lang-ton. The gouernment of this Citie is by two Bailiffei and one Sheriffe, yeerely cholen out of twenty foure Burgesses, a Recorder, a Towné-Clerké, and two Sergeants their Attendants. (9) Houses of Religion creeted in this Shire, Houses of Rewere at Leichfield, Stafford, De la Crosse, Cruxden, Trent-ham, Burton, Tamworth, and Woluer-hampton. These Votaries abusing their Founders true pieties, and heaping vp riches with distaine of the Laitie, laid themselues open as markes to be shot at ; whom the hand of the skilfull soone hit and quite pierced, under the aime of King Henry the Eighth, who with such Revenewes in most places relected the poore and the orphane, with Schooles and maintenance for the training vp of youth: a worke no doubt more acceptable to God, and of more charitable vie to the Land. (10) With 13 Castles this County hath bin strength-ned, and in thirteene Market-Townes her commodined, and in thirteene Market-Townes her commodi-ties traded, being divided into five Hundreds, and in them seated one hundred and thirty parish-churches, as in the Table is alphabetically expressed.

SHROP-SHIRE.

The Saxoniff name of this Shire. The limits.

The forme.

Carr.Caradec.

Cornany.

Henry the

Keng Stephen.

HROP-SHIRE, by the incient Saxons written beipýp-reýpe, is both large in circuit, well peopled, and very fruitfull for life. It lieth circulated vpon the north with the Countie Palatine of Chefter; vp-on the East altogether with Stafford-fhire;vpon the South with Worcester, Hereford, and Radnor-shires. and voon the West with Mountgomery and Denbigh.

(2) The forme thereof is almost circular or round, whose length from Wooferton below Lodlane South, to Ouer necrevato the River Trent in the North, is thirtic foure miles : the broadest part is from Tone in the East, to Ofwestre sited at the head of Morda in the West, twenty and fine; the whole in circuit about extending to one hundred thirty and foure miles.

(3) Wholesome is the aire, delectable and good yeelding the Spring and the Autumne, Seede time and Haruest, in a temperate condition, and afforder health to the Inhabitants in all feasons of the veere

(4) The foile is rich, and ftandeth most vpon a reddish clay, abounding in wheat and barly, pit-coles, iron, and woods, which two last continue not long it league together. It hath Rivers that make fruitfull the Land, and in their waters containe great store of fresh-fish, whereof Seuerne is the chiefe, and second in the Realme, whose streame cutteth this Countie in the middeft, and with many windings sporteth her felfe forward, leaving both pastures and meadowes bedecked with flowers and greene colours, which cuery where the bestoweth vpon such her attendants (5) This River was once the bounds of the North-

Britaines, and divided their possession from the Land of the Saxons, vntill of latter times theirs began to de cay, and the Welfb to increase, who enlarged their lists to the River Dee. So formerly had it separated the Ordonices from the Cornauj, those ancient Inhabitants mentioned by Ptolomie. The Ordonices vnder Carachacus purchased great honour, whilest he a Prince of the Silures remooued his warres thence among them where a while hee maintained the Britaines libertie with valourand courage, in despight of the Romans. His Fort is yet witnesse of his vinfortunate fight, seated neere Clune Caftle, at the confluence of that River with Temd, where (in remembrance of him) the place is yet called Caer-Caradoc, a Fort of his, wonne by whom we have faid. (6) But when the strength of the Romans was too weake to support their owne Empire, and Britaine, emptied of her Souldiers to resist, the Saxons set foot in this most faire soile, and made it a part of their Mercian Kingdome: their line likewise issued to the Jacket Amgaome: their line likewile future to the last period; and the Normans beginning where these Saxons left, the Welfilmen tooke advantage of all present occasions, and brake over Severne vnto the River. Dee; to recour which, the Normans first Kings often assaid, and Henry the second with such danger of life, that at the fiege of Bridge-north he had been flain, had not Sir Hubert Syncler received the arrow aimed at him, in stepping betwixt that Shaft and his Someraigne, and therewith was shot thorow vnto death, Hemy Prince of Section 4. In the like danger flood Hemry Prince of Seatland, who in the ftrait fiege of Ludlow, begitt by King Stephen, is yet caucal Care-Caragoe, a Fort or his, wonne by P.Osforius Lieutenant of the Romans, about the yeere of grace 3. The Cornauj were feated upon the north of Seuerne, and branched into other Counties, of

had been plucked from his faddle with an iron hooke from the wall, had not Stephen presently rescued him,

(7) This then being the Marches of England and Wales, was fore afflicted by bloudy broiles, which caused many of their Townes to bee strongly walled, and thirty two Caffles to bee ftrongly built: laftly, into this County the most wife King Hemy the secuenth sent his eldest some Prince Arthur, to bee resident at Ludlow, where that faire Castle became a most Prince Aribus. famous Princes Court. And heere King Henry the eighth ordained the Counfell of the Marches, confifting of a Lord Prefident, as many Counfellors as the Prince shall please, a Secretarie, an Attorney, a Solicitor, and foure Inflices of the Counties in Wales, in whose Court were pleaded the causes depending and termely tried for the most part in presence of that ho nourable Prefident.

(8) But the Shire-towne Shrewesburie, for circuit, trade, and wealth, doth farre exceed this, and is inferiour to few of our Cities; her buildings faire, her streets many and large, her Citizens rich, her trade for the most part in the staple commodities of cloth and freeses; her walles strong, and of a large compasse, ex-tending to seuenteene hundred pases about, besides another Bulwark ranging from the Castle, downe vnto, and in part along the fide of Severne: thorow which there are three entrances into the Towne, East and West ouer by two faire stone-bridges with Towers,

Gates, and Barres, and the third into the North, no leffe strong then them, ouer which is mounted a large Castle, whose gaping chinkes doe doubtlesse threaten her fall. This Towne is gouerned by two Bailiffes, yeerely elected out of twenty foure Burgesses, a Recorder, Towne-clerke, and Chamberlaine, with three Sergeants at Mace: the Pole being raifed hence from the degrees of Latitude 53.16. minutes, and from West in Longitude 17. degrees 27. minutes. (0) Yea and ancienter Cities have beene fer in this Shire: fuch was Roxalter, or Wroxeester lower vpon Seuerne, that had beene Vriconium, the chiefest Ci tie of the Cornauji, V Joconia, now Okenyate, neere vnto the Wrekin, and vnder Red-cafile the ruines of a Citie whom the vulgar report to have been famous in Arthurs daies: but the peeces of Romish Coines in these three doe well assure vs that therein their Legions lodged; as many other trenches are fignes of war and of bloud. But as fwords have been stirring in most parts of this Prouince, so Beades have been bid for the preservation of the whole, and places creeked for the maintenance of Votaries, in whom at that time was mannersance of votaries, in whom a trust time was imputed great holinefle: in Strensbury many, at Coulmore, Stowe, Dudley, Bromefeld, Wigmore, Hatmand, Lylefill, Bildau, Bilbop-cafile, and Wenloke, (where in the raigne of Richard the Good, was likewide a rich Mine of Copper.) Butthe fame blafts that blew down the buds of fuch Plants, scattered also the fruits from these faire trees, which neuer fince bare the like, nor is likely any more to doe. That only which is rare in this Prouince, is a Well at Pithford in a prisace mans yard, whereupon floteth a thicke skum of liquid Bitumton, which being cleere of today, will gather the like againe on the morrow: nor much valike to the Lake in the Land of Lewry. of to day, will gather the like againe on the morrow : not much vnlike to the Lake in the Land of Jewry.

This Shire is divided into fifteene Hundreds, herein are scated fourteen Market Townes; & hath in it one hundred and seventie Churches for Gods facred and divine service: the names of which are in the Table as followeth.

HESSE-SHIRE by, the Sawww written Ceroep reine and now the County Pala tine of Chefter, is parted vpon the North from Lancathire with the River Mercey, vpon the East by Mercey, Goit, and the Dane is Separa ted from Darbie and Staf. fordfores; vpon the South toucheth the Counties of

Shrotfire and Flint; and vpon the West with Des is parted from Denbigh fbire. (2) The forme of this County doth much refemble

the right wing of an Eagle, spreading it selfe from Wind, and as it were with her pinion, or first seather, toucheth Torke-shire, between which extremes, in following the windings of the Shires divider from East to West, are 47.miles: and from North to South, 26, the whole circumference about one hundred fortie two miles. (3) If the affection to my naturall producer blinde not the judgement of this my furuey, for aireand foile it equals the best, and farre exceeds her neighbours the next Counties: for although the Climate bee cold, and toucheth the degree of Latitude 54, yet the warmth from the Infl. Seas meletch the flow, and diffolueth the ice, footest there then in those parts that are further off; and so wholesome for life, that the Inhabitants generally attaine to many yeeres.

(4) The Soile is fat, fruitfull, and rich, yeelding abun-

He Countie Palatine of Lanrafter (famous for the foure Henries , the fourth, fifth, fixth, and feuenth, Kings of England, derived from John of Gannt Duke of Lancaster) is vponthe South confined and parted by the River Merfey, from the Countie Palatine of Cheffer, the faire

Countie of Darbybire bordering vpon the East; the large Country of Torkefibire, to-gether with Westureland and Cumberland, being her kind neighbours vpon the North, and the Sea called Mare Hibernicum imbracing her vpon the West.

(2) The formethereof islong, for it is so inclosed between Yorkefore on the East fide, and the Irifb Sea on the Welf, that where it boundeth vpon Chefine on the South fide, it is broder, and by little and little more Northward it gooth, (confining vpon Weitmerland) the more narrowit groweth. It containeth in length from Brather Northward. to Halwood South-ward, 57. miles; from Donton in the East, to Formby by Alimonth in the well, 3 1, and the whole circuference in compatie, one hundred threefcore and ten miles,

(3) The Ayre is subtile and piercing, not troubled with grolle vapors or fogglemilts, by reason whereof the peo-ple of that Country liue long and healthfully, and are no fubic to firange and vnknowne difeafes,

(4) The Soile for the generalitie is not very fruitfull, ye produceth such numbers of Cattell of such large propos tion, and fuch goodly heads and hornes, as the whole King-dome of Spains doth scarce the like. It is a Country repleni-shed with all necessaries for the vice of man, yeelding without any great labour the commodity of corne, flax, graffe, coales, and fuch like. The Sea alfoadding her bleffing to the coales, and fush like. The Sea alloadding het bieling to the Land, that the people of the Promise want nothing that feruse either for the fullenance of nature, or the fatteres of paperiar. They are plentifully furnified with all force of fish, flesh, and fowles. Their principal field in Coale and Tarfe, which they have in great abundance the Gendemon way of the Great ornamentro their stantors and rouses. And unogen twe far from Londone (the capitall Citie of this Kingdome) yet doth it euery yeere furnish her and many other parts of the Land befides, with many thoulands of cartell (bred in this Country) giving thereby and otherwaies a firm zetflimony to the world, of the bleifed abundance that it hath pleafed God to inrich this noble Dukedome withall.

(5) This Counties ancient Inhabitants were the Brigants of whom there is more mention in the Description of tants. Yorkelbire, who by Claudou the Emperor were brought vn-der the Roman Subjection, that so held and made it their Seat, secured by their Garrisons, as hath bin gathered as well by many inscriptions found in walles and ancient monuments fixed in flones, as by certaine Altars erected in fauor of their Emperors. After the Romans, the Saxons brought it under their protection, and held it for a part of their Nor thumbrian Kingdome, till it was first made subjugate to the Inuation of the Dases, and then conquered by the victorious Nermans, whose posterities from thence are branched further into England

(6) Places of Antiquitie or memorable note are these the Towne of Manchester (so famous as well for the Market Mancheller. place. Church, and Colledge, as for the refort vntoit for clo thing Iwas called Maneumium by Amonine the Emperor, and

But the Shire-towne is Lancafter, more pleasant in fitua ion, then rich of Inhabitants, built on the fouth of the riuer Lon, and is the lame Longonicum, where (as wee finde in the Notice Proninces) a company of the Longonicarious vnder the Lieutenant Generall of Brasine lay. (7) This Country in divers places suffereth the force of It is severed in (7) This Country in divers places tunereth the force of the force of the force of the force of the violently rentalunder one part of the shire from the other: as in Fourness, where the Ocean being displeased that the Shore should from thence shoot a maine way into the west, hath not obstinately ceased from time to time to flash and mangle it, and with his fell irruptions and boifterous tides to deuoure it.

Another thing there is, not vinworthy to be recommended to memorie, that in this Shire, not farre from Fourneffe Felles, the greatest standing water in all England (called Winander-Mere) lieth, fretched out for the space of ten miles, of wonderfull depth, and all paued with flone in the bottome : and along the Sea fide in many places may bee feene heapes of fand, upon which the people powre water, until it recouer a faltish humor, which they afterwards boile with

Turfes, till it become white falt. (8) This Country, as it is thus on the one fide freed by the natural refiftance of the Sea from the force of Inualons, fo is it strengthned on the other by many Castles and fortified places, that take away the opportunitie of making Roades and Incursions in the Countrey. And as it was with the first that felt the furie of the Saxon cruelties so was it the last and longest that was subdued under the West-Saxon

Monarchie. (9) In this Province our noble Arthur (who died laden with many trophies of honour) is reported by Nisius to have put the Saxons to flight in a memorable Battle neers Duglaffe, a little Brooke not farre from the Towne of Wig gin. But the attempts of warre, as they are scuerall, so they are vncertaine : for they made not Dake Wade happie in his are uncertaine: for they made not Dag Wade happie in his fucceffe, but returned him an vinformate conterprise in the Battle which he gaue to Ardulph King of Northumberland, at Billangho, in the yeare 798.50 were the esents uncertaine in the Citili Wares of Yare and Leanedfer: Or by them was bred and brought forth that bloudy division and fatall strife. of the Noble Houses, that with variable successe to both parties (for many yeeres together) molefled the peace and quiet of the Land, and defiled the earth with bloud, in fuch Lanager. violent manner, that it exceeded the horrour of those Cimil Warres in Rome, that were betwixt Marine and Soylla, Pompey and Cafer, Offenium and Automy; or that of the two re-nowned Houles Valoys and Barbon, that a long time troubled the State of Frances for in the division of these two princely Families there were thirteene fields fought, and three Kings of England, one Prince of Wales, twelve Dukes, one Mar of England, one Frince of Aust, weited Dukes, on the red, edge, eightener Earles, one Victorus, and three and weistle Barons, befides Knights and Gentlemen, loft their liues in the fame. Yet attail, by the happier mariage of Hami's the Seizenth, King of England, next heir to price Houle of Leader, with Elasaberth dusplers and heirs to Edward the Fourth, of the Houle of Yorky, the white and red Rofes were continued to the second s onioined, in the happie vniting of tholetwo dittided Families, from whence our thrice renowned Souersigne Lord King James, by faire fequence and function, adott angie Lord, city faire fequence and function, adott worthily entoy the Diademe: by the benefit of whole happy government, this County Palatine of Laurafter is professous in her Name and Greatnetic.

(10) I findethe remembrance of foure religious houses thathaue beene founded within this County (and finee fur preffed) both faire for fructure and building, and rich for lest and fituation: namely, Burfloyb, Whalleis, Helland, and Penneriham. It is divided into fix Hundreds, befides Fourneffe Fells & Lancafters Liberties, that lie in the north part, Je beautified with 15. Market Townes, both faire for fituatio and building, and famous for the concourse of people for buying and selling. It hath twenty fix Parishes, besides Chapels, (in which they duly frequent to dinine Seruice) and those populous, as in no part of the Land more.

S the courfes and confluents of great Rivers, are for the most part fresh in memory though their heads & fountaines, lie commonly vnknowne : fo the latter knowledge of great regions are not traduced to oblinion, thogh perhaps their first originals be obscure, by reason of antiquity, & themany revolutions of Times and Ages. In the delineation therefore of this great Province of Torkebire, I will not infift upon the natration of matters neere vnto vs. but fuccinctly runne ouer fuch as are more remote; yet neither fo fparinglie, as I may feeme to diminish from the dignity of so worthy a Country, nor fo prodigally, as to fpend time in the fuperfluous praifing of that which neuer any (as yet) difprai-ted. And aithough perhaps it may feemen labour vanecellarie, to make relation of ancient remembrances, either of the Name, or Nature of this Nation, especially looking into the difference of Time it felfe (which in cuery age bringeth forth divers effects) and the difpositions of men, that for the most part take letse pleasure in them, then in digulging the occurrents of their owne times: yet hold it not vafitte to beginne there, from whence the first certaine direction is given to proceed; for, (euen of these ancient things) there may be such good vie made, cither by imitation, or way of comparison, as neither thereperition, nor the repetition thereof shall be accounted im-

(2) You shall therefore understand: That the County of Yorke was in the Saxon-tongue called Eueppic peypo Yorkshire how Epproc-reyne, and Ebora-reyre, and now commonly Yerkesbire, farre greater, and more numerous in the Circuit of her Miles, then any Shire of England. She is much bound to the fingular love, and motherly care of Nature, in placing her vinder to temperate a clime, that in euerie measure thee is indifferently fruitfull. If one part of her be flony, and a fandy barraine ground: another is fertile & richly adorned with corne-fields. If you here finde it naked, and deftitute of woods, you shall see it there, the dowed with Forrests full of trees, that have very thicke Full of Trees, bodies, fending forth many fruitfull and profitable branches. If one place of it bee Moorish, Mirie, or vnpleafant: another makes a free tender of delight, and prefents

For the greater digotite thereof, it was made an Epificopal. Yorke a pleafant Citic, For the greater auguste interest, it was insue an episcopas, See by Conflantim, and a Metropolitane Citie by a Pall lent with it from Honorius. Egbert Arch-bilhop of Torke, who flourished about the yeere leven hundred fortie, creeked in it a moft famous Librarie. Richard the third, repaired the Ca filethereof beeing ruinous, and King Howie the eight, ap-pointed a Counfell in the same, to decide and determine all the causes and controuers of the North-parts, according to equitie and confeience : which Counfell confifteeh of Lord Prefident, certaine Counfellors at the Princes pleafure.

> The original of this Citie, cannot be fetcht out but from the Romanes, feeing the Britanes before the Romanes came had no other Towns then Woods fenced with trenches and rampiers, as Cafar and Strabo doe tellific: And that it was a Colonie of the Romans, appears both by the authoritie of Ptolony & Antonine, and by many ancient inscriptions that have beene found there. In this Citie the Emperour Seneral had his Palace, and hoere gaue up his fall breath; which ministers occasion to shew the ancient custome of the Romanes, in th militarie maner of their burialls.

Secretarie, and other under Officers.

His hodie was caried forth heere by the fouldiers to the Funerall fire, and committed to the flames, honoured with the Justs and Turnaments both of the fouldiers and of his owne fonnes : His aftes bestowed in a little golden potte of veffell of the Porphyrat flone, were carried to Rome and thrined there in the Monument of the Antonines. In this Citie (as Spartianus maketh mention) was the Temple of the God deffe Bellona; to which Senerus (beeing come thither purpoling to offer Sacrifice) was erroneouslie led by a ruffical ngur. Heere Fl. Valerius Constantises, surnamed Chlorus (an Em peror of excellent vertue and charlifan pierie) ended his life and was Deified, as appeares by ancient Coines: and his for Conflantine beeing presentathis Fathers death, foorthwith proclamed Emperour; from whence it may bee gathered of what great estimation Torke was in those dates, when she Roa long time vnder the English-Savons Dominion, till the Danes like a mighty storme, thundring from out the North-East destroied it, and distained it with the bloud of many Baughtered perfons, and wanne it from Orbright and Ella Kings of Northumberland, who were both flaine in their putuite of the Dame: which Alexine in his Epifleto Egelred Kings of Northumberland (terms de operage before, when he faid: What fignifieth that raining down of bloud in S. Peters Church of Torke, even in a faire day, and descending in so violent and threatning a manner from the toppe of the roofe a may it not be thought that bloud is comming upon the Land from the North-parts? Howbeit, Athelftane reconsted it from the Danift Subie

ftion, and quite ouerthrew the Castle with the which they had fortified it; yet was it not (for all this) fo freed from wars but that it was subject to the Times fatallie next following Neuertheleffe, in the Conquerors time, when (after many wo full ouerthrowes and troublefome ftormes) it had a pleasan calme of enfuing peace, it rofe agains of it felfe, and flourishes afreth, having thill the helping hand both of Nobility and Gentrie, to recouct the former dignity and bring it to the perfection it hath: The citizens fencing it round with newe Walls, and many Towers & Bulwarkes, and ordaining good and wholesome Lawes for the Gouernment of the same Which at this day are executed at the command of a Lord Major, who hath the affiftance of twelue Aldermen, many

The longitude of this Citie according to Mercators account, is 19. degrees and 35. feru-

(10) Many occurrents prefent themselues with sufficient matter of enlargement to this discourse, yet none of more worthy confequence, then were these seuerall Battailes, fought within the compaffe of this County; wherein Fortune had her pleasure as well in the proofe of her love, as in the pursuite of her tyrannie, fometime fending the fruits of fweete peace vnto her, and other whiles fuffering her to talk the wreneile of warre,

At Conisborough (in the Britanes tongue Caer-Conan) was | Conisborough a great Battsile fought, by Hengist Captaine of the English-Saxons, after hee had retired himselfe thirher for his lasety. his men beeing fled and scattered, and himselfe discomfitted by Aurelius Ambrofius ; yet within few daies after hee brought | Aurelius Ambr foorth his men to Battaile against the Bruanes that pursued him, where the field was bloudy both to him, and his; for many of his men were cutte in peeces, and hee himselfe had his Head chopt off as the British History saith; which the Chronicles of the Englis Saxon denie, reporting that hee died in peace, beeing furcharged and our worne with the troubleme toiles, and trauels of watre.

Neere vnto Kirkstall, Ofwie King of Northumberland put Penda the Mercan to flight; the place wherein the Battaile Kitkeftall. was joined, the writers call Winnid Field, giving it the name by the victorie. And the little Region about it (in times pall called by an old name Elmer) was conquered by Eadwin King of Northumberland, the fonne of Aela, after hee had expelled Coreticus a British King, in the yeare of Christ, 620.

um) the Citizens of Yorke flew many of King Ethelreds Armie, and had a great hand against him, infomuch as he that before fate in his throne of maiesty, was on a sodaine daunted, and ready to offer submission.

But the moft worth of memory, was that field fought on Palm-Sunday, 1461, in the quarrel of Lancaffer & Tarke, where England neuer law more puilfant forces both of Getry and Nobility: for there were in the field at one time (partakers on both fides) to the number of one hundred thousand fighting men. When the fight had continued doubtfull a great part of the day, the Lancaffrians not able longer to abide the violence of their enemies, turned backe, and fled amaine, and fuch as tooke part with Torke, ollowed them to hotely in chafe, and kild fuch a number of Noble, and Gentlemen, that thirty thousand Englishnen were that day left dead in the field.

(11) Let vs now loofe the point of this Compaffe & faile into fome other pares of the Province to finde out matter of other memorable moment. Vnder Knanibrongb there Places of other is a Wel called Dropping-wel, in which the waters fpring not out of the veines of the earth, but diffill and trickle downe from the rocks that hang ouer it : It is of this vertue and efficacy, that it turner wood into stone: for what wood focuer is put into it, will bee shortly couered ouer with a ftony Barke, and be turned into Stone, as hath beene of

At Gigglesweke also about a mile from Settle (a market Towne) there are certaine small springs not distant a quaits cast from one another: the middlemost of which doth at enery quarter of the houre ebbe and flow about the height of a quarter of a yard when it is highest, and at the ebbefal-leth solow, that it is not a ninch deepewith water. Of no lelle worthinelle to bee remembred is Saint Wifreds needle, a placevery famous in times past for the narrow hole in the close vaulted roome under the ground: by which womens honeflies were wont to be tried : for fuch as were chaft, did patfethrough with much facilitie: but as many as had plaid falfe, were miraculoufly held faft, & could not

The occasion o

The Magistracy of Richmond.

He other divition, which s called the West Riding of orke-fore, lying towards the North-West, carrieth a great compatie: On the North fide t borders upon part of the North -riding : On the East vpon part of the East Riding and part of Lincolneshire. The West-side is neighboured with part of Lancashire: The South

confinde with Noting ham and part of Darby Shires.

(2) The aire vnto which this County is subject, is for he most pare frigid and cold, much subject to sharp winds, hard frofts, and other intemperate and Winter-like dispositions of weather: Infomuch as the People of this Province, are inured to maintaine a moderate, and ordinary heate in theirbodies, by an extraordinary hardnesse of labour, and thereby become very healthfull, and not fooften affliced with infirmities, as others are that live more eafily.

(3) Although the Soile in the generality be not fruit

full, as lying very high and full of ragged rockes and fwel-ling mountaines, yet the fides thereof floping in some places doe beare good graffe, and the bottomes and vallies are not altogether ynfertill. That part that borders vpon Lancafine is so mountanous and walte, so vnlightly and full of solitarineise, that the bordering neighbours call certaine little rivers that creepe along this way, by a contemptible name, Hell backs. That part againe, where the river Vre cut-teth through the vale called Want date is very good ground where great flocks of sheepe doe pasture, and which, in some places, doe naturally yeeld great plenty of Lead-stones: In other places whereshe Hila are barren and bare of Corne and Cattle, they make a recompence of those wants by the flore of Copper, Lead, and flone, or Pit-cole, with the which they are abundantly furnished. That part where the River Smale running downe East ward, out of the Welt Mountaines (with a violent and fwift ftreame) to villade her felfe into the Riuer Frs, and palling along a large and open vale which deriues the name from her, and is called Smale.dals, hath a rieighbouring placeful of Lead-Oarel and for the lacke of woods which doth heere much pinch the People, they are requited agains with plenty of graffe, which this place yeelds them in great abundance. Thus hath provident nature for every diffeommodity made amends with a contrariety, and furnished the defects of one place with fufficient supply from another.

(4) The ancient Inhabitants knowne vnto Ptalomy, and of whom there is other mention made, as well in the general & other particular divisions of Tark fire, as in the Coun tries likewife joining in proximity vnto them were the Brigames lubdued by the Romanes. And because the roome belt fitted for the City of Torke, in this Chard I have placed it, whose description you may finde in the General; so the It who exerciption you may make it the Octable 10 to the North Radam spacious to contain the fittee of the Townes, Hall and Richmonnd are therein charged 1 but waning place there to relate of both 1 am confirmed to speak of the La-ter here defining my Reader to beare with these necessities. Richmond the chiefe Towne of the North-Ridam, seated upon Swale, feemed to have beene fenced with a Wall, whol Gates yet fland in the midft of the Towne, fo that the Suburbs are extended farre without the fame : It is indifferent lie populous and well frequented, the People most implo ed in knitting of Stockings, wherewith euch the decrepi and children get their owns liungs.

(5) Alan the first Earle thereof distructing the strength of Gilling (a Manor house of his not farre off) called by Bea Geshing) to withfland the violence of the Danes and Eng-life, whom the Norman; had definited of their inheritance, built this Towne, and gaue it the name, calling it Richmond, as one would fay, The Rich Mont, which her fortified with a Wall and ftrong Caffle fet vpon a Rocke For Gilling ouer fince the time that Ofan King of Northam berland being there Gueft-wife intertained was murtherou fly made away, was more regarded in respect of Religion then for any firength it had: in expiation of which mu ther, the Monastery was founded and had in great account among our Ancestors, This Town for the administration of gouernement, hath an Alderman yeerely, chofen out of Twelue brethren, who is affilted by 24. Burgelles, a Recor-der, foure Chamberlaines, and two Sergeants at Mace.

The polition of this place for latitude is fet in the degree 55. 17. minutes from the North-Pole, and for Longitude rom the fift West-point in the degree $8. and 50. minutes.

(6) Things of rarity and worthy observation in this County, are those hils neere Richmond, where there is a Mine or Delfe of Copper, mentioned in a Charter of King Edward the fourth, having not as yet beene pierced into. Alfo, those Mountaines, on the toppe whereof are found certaine flones much like vnto Sea-winkles, Cockles, and other Sea-fift; which if they be not the wonders of Nature, yet with Orofinia Christian Hiltoriographer) we may dem to be the vndoubted tokens of the generall deluge, that in Noahs time overflowed the whole face of the earth. Also the River Swale (Spoken of before) which among the ancithe Ruler about 150km of before, which among the ancient English was reputed a very facted River and celebrated with an vniuefal glory, for that (the English Society first imbracing Christianity) in one day about tenne Thousand men, befides a multitude of women and children, were therefore. in Baptized voto Christ, by the hands of Paulinus Archbishop of Torke: A holy spectacle, when out of one Rivers Channell fogreat a progeny fprung vp, for the Caleftiall Bowes, in Austiness Itinerary called Lauatra or Louatra (both by the secount of diffance and the fire thereof by the high freet of the Romans) confirmes the antiquity by a large stone found in the Church, sometimes vsed for an Altar ftone, with an inscription upon it to the honor of the Em-perour Hadrian. The first Cohortallo of the Thracians is: here in Garrison, whilest Virine Lupus ruled as Lieutenan Generall, and Proprætor of Britains under the Emperour General, and Propizzor of Intrame voter the Emperous Summu, as appeared by inferiptions from Incec traditated to Commission in Hamsington-fibre. Here also in the decli-ning cliere of the Romane Empire the Band or Company of the Explorators kept their Station, vader the dif-pose of the Generall of Britains, as is witneffed by the Nopole of the Conceasion special as with mine of the con-tice of Protinces. As Spittle on Staumer's is the fragment of a Croffe, by we called Reveryife, by Seat, Reivinfe, as one would (ay, The Kings Croffe, which Helder Bassine (a Seath writer) recorded to chain becne a mere Lone confining England and Septland, And a little lower your the Roma high Street , flood a little Fort of the Romans built four fquare, which at this day is called Maiden-Cofile. At Burgh (in times past called Bracebium) the fixt Cohort of the Norniens lay in Garrison. And not long since the Scattle of Aumier lay in Garrifon. (5) The ancient Inhabitants knowne vnto Pto-[5] I ne ancient innabirants knowne white File-lemie, were the Brigantes, of whom we have spoken in the Generall of Torke-shire, they being subdued by the Romans; after whom the Saxons made it a part of their Northumberlands Kingdome: at first a Prouince belong-ing to the Deirians, and eniosed by Ella their first King; afterwards inuaded by the Danes, and laftly possessed by the Normans : whose site being so necre ento Scotland, hath many times felt their furie, and hath been as a buckler betwixt them and the English; for which cause, the Inhabitants haue certaine freedomes, and are not charged with feruice as other Counties are, fo that this with Westmorland, Cumberland, and Northumberland, are not divided into Hun-dreds in those Parlament Rolles whence I had the reft: which want I must leave for others to supply. (6) Ouer this County, the Bishops thereof haue had the Royalties of Princes, and the Inhabitants haue pleaded prinilege not to passe in service of warre ouer the river of Tees or Tyne; whose charge (as they haue alleged) was to keepe and defend the corps of saint Cuthbers their great adored Saint and therefore they termed themselves, The holy-werk-folkes. And the repute of this Cuthbert and his supposed defense against the Scots was such, that our English Kings in againt the exert was been considered in the first in great decoration have gone in pilgrimage to vific his Tombe, and have given many large possess to his Church: such were King Egfrid, Elfred, and Outterwithe Dane, Edward, and Abbellian Monarch of Endews King his beautiful and the large such as the first his such as the first h gland, and zealous Canute the greatest of all, who came s. Cushert. thither bare-footed, and at Cuthberts Tombe both augmented and confirmed their Liberties. This Saint then, of nothing made Durham become great, and William the Conqueror of a Bifhopricke made it a Countie Palatine: at that time William Careleph Bifhop of the Diocesse pulled downe the old Church which aldwin had built, and with fumptuous coft laid the foun-dations of a new, wherein saint Cuthberts Shrine in the vacancie of the Bishoppes, was the Keeper of the Caftle-keyes.

In the West of this Church and place called Gallile. the Marble Tombe of venerable Beda remaineth, who was borne at I arro in this Countie, & became a Monk was borne at Tarro in this Countie, of Declaire a results at Weremouth, whose painful industries and light of learning in those times of darknesse are wonderfull. The Monta ide as the volumes which he wrote doe well declare. And neffecthe saufe o had the idle Monks of England imploid their times their observations after his example, their Founders expectations had not beene frustrate nor those foundations so easilie ouerturned. But the reuenge of finne cuer following the actions of finnes, diffolued first the largenesse of this Counties liberties under the raigne of King Edward the first, and since hath shaken to pecces those places herein erected under the raigne of King Henry the eight : fuch were Durham, Sherborne, Stayndrop, Iarro, Weremouth, and Eggleton; all which felt the re-ward of their idlenes, and wrath of him that is icalous of his owne honour. (7) Things of rare note observed in this Shire are hree Pits of a wonderfull depth, commonly called the Hell-Kettles, which are adjoining neere vnto Dar-i ra-mount maner i mention, whole record is this. On Christmas day at Oxenhallin the Territorie of Der ling-ton, within the Bishopricke of Durham, the ground heaved op aloft like unto an high Tower, and so continued all that wy mejs use vine an mgn 1 over, and premiumed dutingle day, as it were enimoueable until the eneming; and then sell with so borrible a noise, that it made all the neighbor dwel-lers fore afraid: and the earth swallowed it up, and made in the same place a deepe pit, which is there to be seene for a testimony unto this day.

(8) Of no lesse admiration are certaine stones lying within the River tyeere, at Butterbee neere Dur-ham; from whose sides at the Ebbe and low water in the Summer, iffueth a certaine falt reddish water, which with the Sunne waxeth white, and growing in-to a thicke substance, becommeth a necessary salt to the vie of the by-dwellers.

(9) And places of elder times had in account by hinchefter, the Romans, were Benoulum, now Binchefter, and Condercum, Cheffer in the firet, where their monies have been digged vp, and at Condercum fo much, that Egd-rik Bishop of Durham, was therewith made exceeding-

This Countie hath been strengthened with seuen strong Castles, is yet traded with six Market Townes, Reby. and Gods divine honour in one hundred and eighteene Parish Churches celebrated, whose names in the Table are further inserted.

CHAPTER XLIV.

Chap.44.

Estmortand by some late latine writers is called Westmaria and westmortandia. by fome latter Westmoria, and in our English tongue Westmorland. It came to be thus named in our language by the fituation, which in enery part is fo plenteously full of Moors and high hils, reaching one to another, that Westmorland (with vs) is nothing else but a westerne moorish Country. Having on the West and Northside Cumberland, on the Southpart, Lancashire, on the East number of many yeeres.

(4) The foyle for the most part ofir, is but barren, and can hardly bee brought to any fruitfulnesse by the industry and painfull labour of the husbandman, the indutry and patentili about of the musculations being fo full of inferrile places, which the Northeren Englishmen call Moores: yet the more Southerly part is not reported to bee fo sterile, but more fruitfull inthe valleies, though conteined in a narrow roome, be-tweene the river Lone, and Winander-mear, and it is all termed by one name. The Barony of Kendale or Candale, that is, the dale by Can, taking the name of the ri-uer Can that runnes through it.

It challengeth not much glory for Antiquity, onely this taxcounterth a great credit, that it hath dignified three Earles with the title three Chat Lohn Dake's England, when Henry the fift (being his brother) advanced to that honour, John Duke of Sommerfet, & John de Feis, whom King Hen-ry the fixt preferred to that dignity for his honorable and trufty feruices done in the French warres. It is a place of very citill and orderly government, the pateror very cuit and often governments which is managed by an Alderma, cholen euery yeer out of his twelue brethren, who are all diffinguilhed & notified frother eft by the wearing of purple garments. The Alderman, and his Senior Brother are alwaies Iustices of peace and Quorum. There are in it a Town-Clerke, a Recorder, two Sergeants at Mace, and two Chamberlaines. In the other, the Anvelian Manre kept a flation in the time of the Romanes, and their high freece is yet apparently to be seen by the ridges therof which leade by Apelby to a place called Brouonacum, menti-oned in the booke of Prouincial notices. The antike peeces of Romane covne, otherwhiles digd vp heerabouts, and some inscriptions not long since found, flew of what continuance they have bene: although Time, which denoureth all things, hath so fed vpon their Carcales many ages together, as it hath almost consumed both houses, and Inhabitants. For Apelly now is bare both of people and building, and were it not for the antiquity that makes it the more efteemable in whose Castle the assissare commonly kept, it would be little better in account then a village. Vern would be intre better in account them a vinage/Fet-ter is long fince decayed, and the name of it changed into Burgh: for it is commonly named Burgh vnder Stanepure. In which it is said, a Romane Captaine made his aboad with a band of Director's in the declining age of the Romane Empire. These two places William of Newborough calleth Princely Holds, & writeth that William King of Scots, a little before hee himfelfe was taken priloner at Alnewicke, furprized them on a fudden; but King John recoursed them after and liberally bestowed them vpon Robert Vipont, for his many worthy feruices.

(9) There is mention made but of one religious house that hath been in al this Country, and that was a little Monastery seated neere vnto the river Leder, built by Thomas the sonne of Gospatrick, the sonne of orms: where there is a fountaine or fpring that ebbes and flowes many times a day, and it is thought that fome notable act of Archieuement hath beene pernome nomine accor extensionen nata beene per-formed there, for that there be huge flones in form of Pyramides, fome nine foote high and fourteen foote thick, raunged for a mile in length directly in a row and equally diffant, which might freme to haue been there purposely pitched in memory theros: But what that Act was is not now knowne, but quite worn out of remembrance by times injurie

mberland, the furthest North-west Prouince in this Realme of England, confronteth vpon the fouth of Scotland, and is diuided from that Kingdome partly by the riner Kirfop, then crofsing Eske, by a tract thorow Solome-

Mosse, vntill it come to the Solwaye Frith, by Ptolemie called the Itune Baye. The North-west part is neighboured by Northumberland, more eastward with westmerland, the South with Lancashire, and the West is wholly washed with the

(2) The forme whereof is long and narrow, pointing wedge-like into the South, which part is altogething wedge-ine to the south, which part is along the peftred with copped hilles, and therfore hath the name of Cop-land. The middle is more leuell, and better inhabited, yeelding fufficient for the fuffenance of man: but the North is wild and folirarie, combred or man: out rue Novin its wind and oldrame, commore with hilless as Copland is.

(3) The aire is piercing, and of a flar pte temperature, and would be more biting, were it not that thole high hilles breake off the Northerne flormes, and cold falling flowes.

(4) Norwithlanding, rich is this Prouluce, and with great varieties thereof is replenished: the hilles, though rough, yet fmile vpon their beholders, spread with sheepe and cattle, the vallies stored with grasse and corne sufficient : the sea affoordeth great store of fish, the land ouer-spread with varietie of fowles, and the rivers feed a kinde of Muskle that bringeth forth Pearle, where in the mouth of the Irt, as they lie gaping and fucking in dew, the Country people gather and fell to the Lapidaries, to their owne little, and the buyers great gaine. But the Mines Royall of Copper, whereof this Country yeeldeth much, is for vie the richeft of all: the place is at Kefwick and Newland, where likewife the Blacke Lead is gotten, whose plentie maketh it of no great esteeme; otherwise a com-moditie that could hardly be missed.

(5) The ancient Inhabitants knowne to the Ro mans, were the Brigantes, whom Ptolemy disperseth into westmorland, Richmond, Duram, York-shire, and Lanca-foire. But when the Saxons had ouer-borne the Britaines, and forced them out of the best, to seeke their resting among the vast Mountaines, these by them were entred into, where they held play with those enemies maugretheir force, and from them, as Marianus doth witnesse, the Land was called Cumber, of those Kumbri the Britaines. But when the State of the Saxons was fore shaken by the Danes, this Cumberland was accounted a Kingdome it felfe; for so the tana was accounted a Kingdonie k let; to k out to Flower-gatherer of westminster recordeth: King Ed-mund (suith he) with the helpe of Leoline Prince of South-wales, wasted all Cumberland, and having put out the cies of the two somes of Dunmail King of that Province, gran-ted that King dome onto Malcolm King of Scots, whereof their eldeft sonnes became Prefects. This Prouince, King Stephen to purchase fauour with the Scats, what time hee stood in most need of aid, confirmed by gift vnder their Crowne; which Henry the second not-withstanding made claime vnto and got, as Newbrigensis writeth, and laid it againe in the Marches of England: fince when, many bickerings betwixt thefe Nations herein haue hapned, but none so sore against the Sectiff side, as was that at Solome Mosse, where their Nobilitie disdaining their Generall Oliver sinclere, gaue ouer the Battle, and yeelded themselues to the English; which dishonour pierced so deepely into the heart of King James the fifth, that for griefe thereof he fhortly after died.

(6) Many memorable Antiquities remaine and haue beene found in this County : for it being the Confines of the Romans Possessions, was continually fecured by their Garrifons, where remaine at this day parts of that admirable wall built by Seuerus: also an other Fortification from Werkinton to Elns Mouth, vpon the fea-thoare toward Ireland, by Stilico raifed when vnder Theodofius he suppressed the rage of the Pitts and Irifb, and freed the Seas of the Saxons Pyrats. Vpon Hard-knot hill, Moresby, Old Carleil, Pap-castle along the Wall, and in many other places, their ru-

ines remaine, with Altars, and Inscriptions of their Captaines and Colonies, whereof many haue beene found, and more as yet lie hid. (7) The chiefest City in this Shire is Carlile, pleafantly feated betwixt the Riucrs Eden, Petterell, and

Cand, by the Romans called Luguvallum; by Beda, Luell; by Ptolemie, Leucopibia; by Ninius, Caer-Lualid; and by vs Carlile. This City flourishing vnder the Romans, at their departure by the furious outrages of the Scott and Piets was dejected, yet in the daies of Egfrid King of Northumberland was walled about : but againe defaced by the ouer-running Danes, lay buried in her owne ashes the space of two hundred yeeres; vpon whose ruines at length Rusus set his compassionate eie, and built there the Castle, planting a Colonie of Flemings to secure the Coasts from the Scots, but vpon better aduisement remoued them into Wales. Af ter him, Henry his brother and fucceffour ordained this City for an Episcopall See: whose site is placed in the degree of Longitude from the first West pare 17. and 2. Cruples, and the Pole thence elevated from the degree of Latitude 55. and 56. Cruples,

(8) West from hence, at Burgh vpon the fand, was the fatallend of our famous Monarch King Edwas the team teat of our famous propagate range de-pared the First, who there leaving his warres vinfinish-ed against scaland, left his troubles and soone milded life, to his varientley and soone lamented death. (10) This County as it flood in the fronts of affaults, so was it strengthned with twenty sue Castles, and preferued with the praiers (as then was thought) of the Votaries in the houses erected at Carlile, Leneof the Potanes in the nours erected at Cartile, Lene-eoft, Wetherall, Holme, Daker, and Saint Bees. Thele with others were difficulted by King Homy the eighth, and their reuenewes shadowed under his Crowne: but the Province being freed from charge of subsidy, is not therefore divided into Hundreds in the Parlament Rowles, whence wee haue taken the divisions of the rest : only this is observed, that therein are seated nine Market-Towns, fiftie eight parish-churches, besides many other Chapels of case.

The Soile,

Newcallta.

He County of Northumber land, which the English-Saxous called Norp-humber lono hath on the South the Bishoprick of Durham, being thut in with the river Derwent, and with Tyne : the North is confind vpon Scotland, the West vpon part of Scotland and part of Cumberland: The East-side lyeth altogether vpon the Sea, called Mare-Germanicum. (2) The formethereof is Triangle, and difference much in the fidings for from her South Ealt, vnto the South-Weftpointare neere vnto 40.miles ; from thence to her Northpoint are fixtie Miles, and her bale along the Sea-shoare 45. miles: The whole in Circumference is about one hundred forty five miles

(3) The Ayre must needs be subtle, and piercing for that the Northernly parts are most exposed to extremity of weathers, as great winds, hard frofts, and long lying of frowes, &c.Yet would it be farre more fharper then it is, were not the Germane Seas a ready meanes to further the diffolution of her Ice and Snow, and the plenty of Coales there gotten, a great help to comfort the body with warmth and defend the bitter coldnes.

(4) The Soile cannot berich, having neither fertility of ground for Corn or Cattle, the most part of it being rough and in enery place hard to bee manured, faue onely towards the Sea, and the river Time, where, by the great difigence, and industrious paines of good husbandry that part is become very fruitfull.

(5) The ancient Inhabitants of this Countrey mentioned by Ptolomy were called Ostalini, OTTADENI, & OTTA-DINI, which by an calle alteration (as M'. Cambden (aith) if it had bene called OTTATINI, fignifying about the river Tyne, or on the farther lide of Tyne (for io this people were planted) there would have beene much confonance both with the name of the Juhabitants, and the Polition & Site of the Province. (6) The Chiefest commodity that enricheth this Countye are those Stones Limbanerases, which wee call Sea-coales, whereof there is fuch plenty and abundance digged vp. as they doe not onely turne a great gaine to the Inhabitants, but procure also much pleasure and profit to others.

(7) No place in this Prouince vents forth formany of thefe Sea-coales into other regions as Newcastle doth, being the very eye of all the Townes in this Countye; for it doth not onely minister reliefe(by such provision) to all other parts of England, but doth alfo furnish the wants of forrain countries with her plenty. By meanes of this, and the intercourfe A rich towne. of Trafficke which it hath, the place is grown exceeding rich and populous. Before the Conquest it was called Monk-chefor: having beene (as it feemed) in the possession of Monker. and Cheffer beeing added, which fignifies a Bulwarke or place of defence, the westhat in ancient time it had beene place of fortification.

(8) After the Conquest it got the name of Neweastle, by the new castle which Robert the sonne of William the Conqueror built there out of the ground. What it was called in old time is not knowne, yet some are of opinion that it may be thought to have beene Gattosenum, for that Gates-bead, the suburbe (as it were) of the same, expressed in the owne proper lignificatio, that British name, Gatrofentum, le is now most enobled both by the Hauen (which Tyme maketh Jof that notable depth, that it beareth very tall Ships, and is able to defend them from flormes and tempelts. As alfo by many fauours, and honours, wherewith it hath bene dignified by princes:for Richard the fecond graunted that a fword should be carried before the Major: and Henry the fixemade it a County confifting of a Corporation within i selfe.It is adorned with foure Churches, and fortified with ftrong walls that have eight gates. It is diffant from the first West line 2 1. degrees and 30. Minutes, and from the Equi-noctial! line towards the Northpole 34. degrees and 57.

(a) The vemost towns in England and the strongest hold in all Britaine is Barwick. From whence it had the name it not certainely made knowne. Some fetch it from Berengarim a Duke (neuer read of:) some fay it was called Beogni-

octweene two mighty Kingdomes, shooting farre into the Sea, with the which, and the river Tneed, it is alm off encompaffed; and whenfoeuer any difcord fell betweene the two Nations, this place was the first thing they tooke care of .It hath indured the brunts of divers inroades & incursions, & bene oftentimes both poffeffed and repoffeifed of the Scott and English: But since it was reduced under the command of Edward the fourth, our Kings haue from time to time fo ftrengthened it with new works and fortifications, as they cut off all hopes of winning it. The governour of this towne | The Governore is also VVarden of the East Marches against Scotland. The

Longitude of it according to Mathematicall obsetuation is 21. degrees, and 43. minutes: The latitude 55, degrees and 48.minutes. (10) The Inhabitants of this County area warlike people, and excellent light horsemen, and are made fierce and hardy by the feueral encounters of the Sens; & not much vnlike them in neither, betwixt whom in this County many battailes have beene fought, and the fucceifes of tentimes waved through very doubtfully, the victory formtimes falling to the Seats, formetimes to the English. At Osturburne was one, in which three or four times, it flooddoubtfully in different, till in the end the Score got the vpper hand of the English Howbeit their glory was not made so illustrious by this Conquest, but that it was as much darkned by the foile they received at Annicks, where William King of Seass, was taken and presented prisoner to Heavy the second. As also by that battaile at Brum-ridge, where King Ashelflan fought a pitcht field against Anlaye the Dane, Conflancine King of Scott, and Engenius King of Comberland, and that with such fortunate successes a sit hath left matter sufficient to fill the pennes of Historians. Flodden field also memorable in the leath of lames the fourth, King of Seets, who was there flain ocatio i samer incloura, ang ed seet, who was three lain and his Army ouerthrowne in a linere fight, as the displaied his banner (in great hope) againt England, when King Heny the cight lay at the flegs of Tamay in France.

(11) Other battoiler in this County have beene, as that as Resam(called by Red England ploy when 1 he Need) Margues Alonsacute, encountred the Leaders of the Lanaghrian faction with much courage, and with greater fuccetle put them to flight, for which he was made Earle of Northumber. land by Edward the fourth. As also that at Diffen (by Bede called Disselfburns,) where Ofwald having the faith of Christ for his defence and armour, slew Codows! the Britaine in a fet Battaile, himfelfe ftraightwaies becomming a pro felled Christian, and causing his people to beeinstructed in Christian religion.

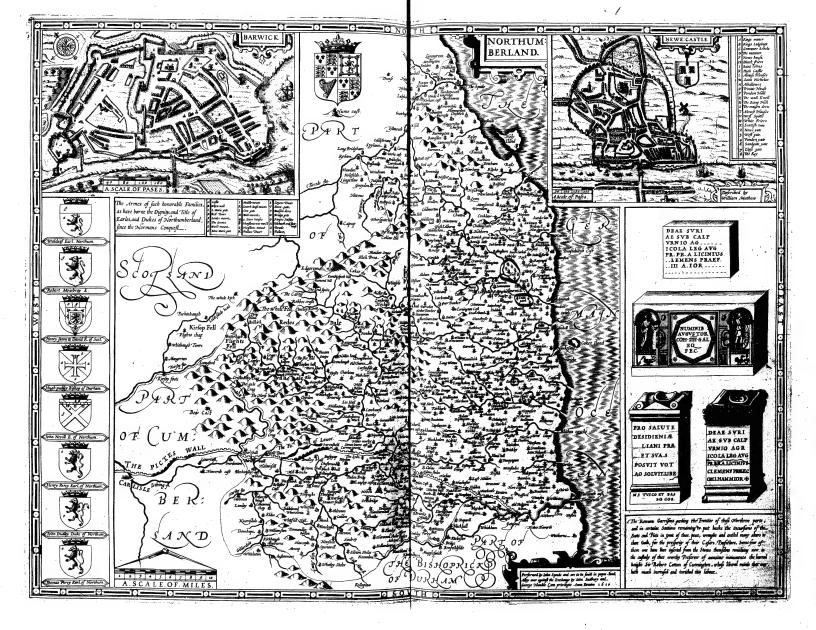

(12) Many memorable antiquities are found in this Country along the wall, and in other places : As peeces o Coyne, inferiptions, broken and unperfect Altars, &c. (the ruines of the wall yet to bee feener) but none that deferues notice to be removed the Med. tiue Church of the English Nation.

(13) Busy-gap is a place infamous for robbing and thee-uing, & is therfore tather remembred as a Camionarie note for such as have cause to travell that way, then for any pro per marcer of worth it hath, that merits place with other parts of this Prouince. Other matters of observation are onely these, that north Time(running through the Wall) waters two dales, which oreed notable light horsemen, and both of them have their hills (hard by) fo boggy and flanding with water on the top, niisi (introby) do oggy annuasuus annuasuu on to ogg that no horfemen arable to ride through them, and yet (which is wonderfulbree be many great hapese of Stock (called Lesso) which the raighbouring people are verily perfused owere call yet and layd together in old time, in temembrance of form that were faint there. There is also a of Men. marriall kinds of men which lie out vp and downe in little cottages (called by them Sheals and Shealings) from Aprill corregated and on them defend and containing a prior Appell, in a Castering fathion, fummering (as they terme it) their Castle, and these are such a fort of people as were the ancient Normades. The last, not least, matter of nore is this, that the Inhabitants of Norpais Set their owne towne on fire in the yeare of Christ 12 15, in the spight they bas to King John, for that hee and his Rutars over ranne thefe

T is here very pertinent to the purpof tomfert a finall thistoric of this tland, that the atchesicements heretofore had, may not be otterly buried, although they are waxen very old, and almost torne from remembrance by the teeth of Time. It is conflicted by all, that the bictaines held this lland, at they did all Britaine. But when the Nations from the North ourselfuneathiefs could past; like vision temples; there may object in the Scots. Afterward, the Norwegians, who did most hunt from the North ourse. Sea to their manifold robotics, made this I land and the I televides to be their haunt, and erected Lords and petty Kings in the same, as is expressed in this Chronicle, written (as is reported) by the Monks of the Abbey of Russin.

A (bronicle of the Kings of Man.

A Nno Dom. 1063. Edward of bleffed memory, King of specific parted this life, and Handd the fourse of Galden per for exceed billion in the Kingdom against whom Handd Hanfyer (King of Normay) came into the field, and fought a blacked as the specific part of the and honourably received him.

and nonourably received into.
(2) The fame yeer William the Baffard coquered England,& Godred the fon of Syrrio died, his fon Fingal fucceeding him. (;) An. 1066, Godred Cronan affembled a great Fleet and came to Man, and fought with the people of the Land, and came to Dana, and rought with the Popular to the Lating but received the worlf, and was our come.

The fecond time renewing his forces and his Fleet, he faired into Man, and ioined battell with the Manke man, but was vanquifhed as before, and driven out of the field. Howbeir, what he could not at first bring to passe with power in those two scuerall onsets, he afterwards effected by policie. For the third time gathering a great multitude together, he arrived by night in the Hauen called Kamfer, and hid three hundred men in a wood, which flood vpou the hanging hollow brow of an hill called Sectivil. The Sunbeng rilen, the Mankings put their people in order of battell, and with a violent charge encountred with Godred. The fight was hot for a time, and Galeed Comen thood in a doubtfull suspence, till those three hundred men flarting out of the Ambush behind their backs, beganne to foile the Mankemen, put them to the worlf, and forced them to life. Who feeing themfelues thus difcomfitted, and finding no place of refuge left them to escape, with pitifull lamentations submitted themselves vnto Godred, and befought him notto putto the fword fuch poore remainder of them as was left alive, Godred having compassion on their calamities, (for he had been nourfed for a time and brought vp among them) founded a retrait, and prohibited his hoft any longer put flit He being thus pollefled of the flee f.Mass, died in the Hand that is called flee, when he had raigned fixtene yecress Heleft behind him three fonnes, Lagman, Havald, and Olane.

(4) Lagraca the eldeft taking upon him the Kingdome, raigned fourn veres. His brother Harald rebelled against him a great while; but at length was taken prisoner by Lagiman, who caused his members of generation to be cut oil, and his ejesto be put out of his head. Which cruestie this Lagman afterwards repenting, gaue ouer the Kingdome of his owne accord, and wearing the badge of the Lords Croffe tooke a journey to Ierufalem, in which he died.

(5) An. 1075. all the Lords and Nobles of the Hands hearing of the death of Lagman, dispatched Ambassadors to Murecard O-brien, King of Ireland, and requested that hee Musecard O-bries, King of tretand, and requested that nee would fend fome worthy and industrious man of the Bloud Royall to be their King, till Olause the fon of Gedred came to full age. The King yet ling to their request. Gent one Dopada the fon of Tade, and charged himto governe the Kingtome Departd King. (which by right belonged to another) with lenitic and gentlenetle. But after he was come to the Crowne, forgetting, or not weighing the charge that his Lord and Mafter had giuen him, fwaied his place with great tyranny committing many outragies and crue ties, and fo raigned three veeres: till all the Princes of the Ilands agreeing together tole vp against him, and made him flie into Ireland,

(6) An Do. 1111 Olane the fon of Godred Cronan aforefaid, began his raigne, and raigned forty yeeres a peaceable laid, began instalgine, and raigned to by years a preceding Prince. He tooke to wife Africa, the daughter of Fergus of Gal-may, of whom he begat Godred. By his Concubines hee had Regnald, Legman, and Harald, befide many daughters, whereof one was martied to Summerled, Prince of Herrgal-whereof one-was married to SummerIod, Prince of Herrey, and ded, who cauded the returne of the Kings of the Illand, On her he begat four Gons, Duele Alexinguid, Enguyan and Olans, (2) An Donn, 1444, Goderdath Gont Olans, was created King of Man and raigned thrirty vecres. In the third yeere of this raigne, the propole of Dublie of the for him, and made their King, Which Man-eard King of Ireland maligning, article way, and fem Ofberty his half-brother by the mother relationship of the Man and the River of the Man and the River of the Man and the River of the River of the Man and the River of the R fides with 3000 men at Armes to Dublin, who by Godred and the Dublinians was flaine, and the rest all put to flight. These atchieuements made, Godred returned to Man, & began to vicevranny, turning the Noblemen out of their inheritances. Whereupon one called Thorfin (Otors (onne)being mightier then the reft, came to Summerled, and made Dulea (Summerleds fonne) King of the Hands : whereof Godred hauing intelligence, prepared a Nauie of 80. Ships to meete Summerled. And in the yeere 1156. there was a bartell fought at Sea on Twelfth day at night, & many flaine on both fides. But the next day they grew to a pacification, and dissided the Kingdome of the llands among themselues. This was the caule of the ouerthrow of the Kingdome of the Iles. (8) Ann. 1158. Summerled came to Man with a fleet of fiftie three faile, put Godred to flight, and wasted the Hand. Godred upon this croiled ouer to Norway for aid against Summerled, But Summerled in the meane time arthing at Rhinfrin, and having gathered together a fleet of 1060. flaps, coucting to subdue all Scotland, by the just sudgement of God was vanquished by a few, and both himseife and his fonne flaine, with an infinite number of people.

(9) The fourth day after Reginald began to raigne, but Godred comming upon him out of Norway with a greatmultitude of armed men, tooke his brother Raignald, and bereft him both of his eies & genitall members. On the fourth Ides of November, An. Dom. 1187. Godred King of the Hands died, and his body was translated to the Ile of Ely. He left died, and his body was translated to the life JE. Heleft behinde him three founes, Rejand, Johns, and Yuar, Hord-daired in his life time, that Olaum found (fucecede him, be-cusio he only was borne legitiment. But the people of Man-fecing him to be fearce ten yeeres old, fent for Rognald, and made him their King. This cauded great duulinon, and many turbulent attemps between the two brethers, hor the flace turbulent attemps between the two brethers, hor the flace of thirtie eight yeeres; which had no end, till at a place called Tingualla there was a Battle strucke betweene them. wherein Olane had the victorie, and Reignald was flaine. The Monkes of Rushin translated his body vnto the Abbey of S. Mary de Fournes, and there interred it in a place which himfelfe had chofen for that putpofe.
(10) An.1230 Olane and Godred Don (who was Reginalds fonne) with the Nonwegians came to Man, and divided the Kingdome among themselves. Olane held Man, and Godred being gone vnto the Ilands, was flaine in the Ile Lodhus. So Olane obtained the Kingdome of the Isles. Hee died the twelith Calends of June, Anno 12;7. in S. Patrick Hand, and twent Calenda or tame, anno 1237. In a reprise quanto, and was buried in the Abbey of Reffin.

(11) Harold his fonne fucceeded him; being foureteene yeeres of age, and raigned wellue yeeres. In the yeere 1339, he went vurn other King of Normay, who after two yeters confirmed voto him, his heires and fucceifours, while his Seale, all the liands which his Predeceffours had policifed.

(12) An. 1242. Handlifetturned out of Norman, and he ing by the Inhabitants honourably received had peace with the Kings of England, and of Sealand. The fame yeere hee was fent for by the King of Norway, & maried his daughter. In the yeere 1249. as he returned homewards with his wife, h was drowned in a tempelt neere unto the Coasts of Radiand (13) An. Dom. 1249. Reginald the fonne of Olame, and brother to Harold, beganne his raigne, and on the thirtieth day thereof was flaine by one Tuar a Knight, in a meadow neere unto the holy Trinitte Church, and lieth buried in the Church of S. Mary of Ruffus.

(14) In the yeere 1252. Magnus the fon of Olasse came to Man, and was made King. The next yeere following he went Adam, and was made thing. The next years for howing the weat to the King of Norway, and stated there a years. HOLY ILAND.

Book.1.

His Iland is called Lindiffarne, by the Riucr Lied that is opposite vato it on the Coast of Northumberland. Beda termeth it a Demy Iland. The Britaines name it Inis Medicante. for that it twice energy day fuffreth an extraordinarie inundation and o-uerflowing of the Ocean in maner of an Iland, which twice likewife makes it continent to the Land, and returning vnto her watry habitation, laies the Shoare bare againe, as before. It is called in English, Holy-Iland, for that in ancient times many Monkes have beene accustomed to retire themselves thither, and to make it their receptacle for solitude : having on the West and South, Northumberland, and more South-Eastward the Iland Farne.

(2) The forme of it is long and narrow, the West side narrower then the East, and are both conioined by a very small spang of land that is left vnto Conies. The South is much broader then the rest. It is from East to West about two thousand two hundred and fiftie pales; and from North to South, twelue hundred and fiftie pases; so that the circumference cannot be great.

(3) The aire is not very good either for health or delight, as being seated on those parts that are subject to extremity of cold, and greatly troubled with vapours and foggy mifts that arise from the Seas.

(4) The foile cannot bee rich, being rockie and full of stones, and vnfit for corne and tillage. It is neither commended for hils to feed sheepe, nor pastures to fat cattle, neither hath it vallies replenished with fweet fprings, or running riuellets, onely one excepted, descending from a standing pond. The only thing this Iland yeeldeth, is a fit and accommodate aptitude for fishing and fowling.

(5) Notwithstanding this is very worthy of note concerning the same, which Alexin wrote in an Epifile to Egelred King of Northumberland, namely that it was a place more venerable then all the places of Britaine, and that after the departure of S. Paulinus from Yorke, there Christian Religion began in their Nation, though afterwards it there felt the first beginning of miserie and calamitie, being left to the spoile of Pa gans and Miscreants.

(6) It is also remembred of this Iland, that sometimes there hath beene in it an Episcopall Sec, which Aidan the Scot instituted (being called thither to preach the Christian Faith to the people of Northum-berland) being much delighted with the solitary situation thereof, as a most sit place for retire. But af-terwards when the Danes rished and robbed all the Sea-Coasts, the Episcopall See was translated to Durham.

(7) This Iland to fmall in account either for compaffe or commodity, and so vnpeopled and vnprofitable, cannot be numerous in Townes and Villages. It bath in it only one Towne, with a Church and a Castle, under which there is a commodious Hauen, defended with a Blockhouse, situate upon an hill towards the South-east.

FARNE ILE.

His Ile South-eastward seuen miles from Hoh Iland, sheweth it selfe difant almost two miles from Bambrough Castle. On the west and South it beareth vpon Northumberland, and on the North-east side it hath other fmaller Ilands adioining to it, as Widness and Staple Iland, which lie two miles off Bronfman, and two lef-fer then these, which are called the Wamber.

(2) The forme of this lle is round, and no larger in compaffe then may easily be ridden in one halfe of aday. The bredth of it is but fine miles, and the length no more. The whole circumference extends it felfe no further then to fifteene miles.

(3) The aire is very vnwhole some, and subject both to many Dysenteries and other diseases, by reason of the misty sogges and exhalations that are therunto drawne vp from the Ocean. It is many times troubled with vnufuall tempefts of windes, with boifterous fury of ftormie raines, and with feuerall and vncouth rages of the Sea.

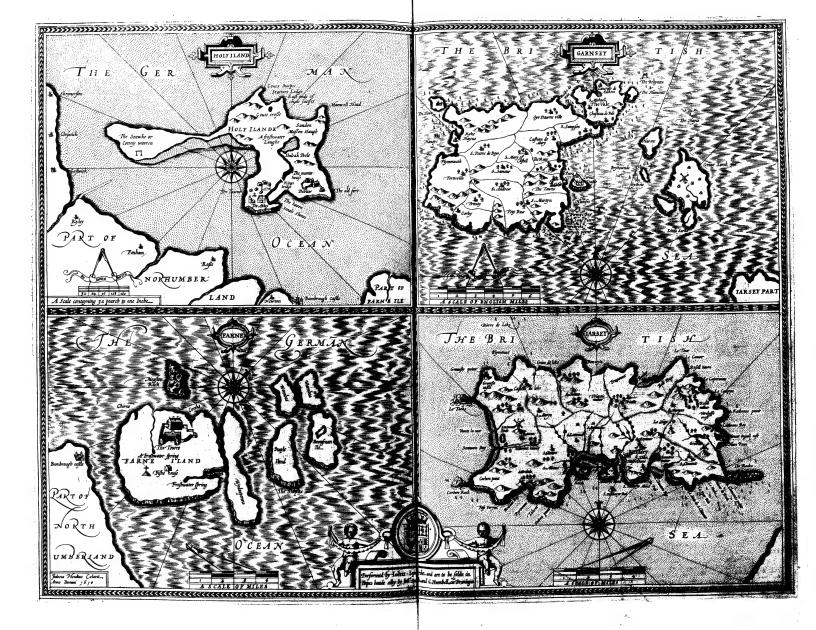

(4) The foile cannot be fertill, being encircled a bout with craggie clifts; neither hath it, in it much matter either of pleasure or profit. It can neither defend it felfe from cold, lacking fuell, as wood, cole, turfes, &c. nor from famine, wanting food, as corne, pastures, cattle, &c. The best commoditie it yeelds, is fifth and fowle.

(5) This thing neuertheleffe is worthy to bee rememberd of it, which Beda (writing of the life of cuthshor Billong of Lindsigns, that Tutales Parson of the Northerns Englishmen) reported, namely, that in this lie he built a City fitting his gouertment, andereded certaine houles in the lame; the whole build needed certaine houles in the lame; the whole build and the state of the name of the ing standing almost round in compasse, and reaching the space of foure or sine pearches. The wall about it he made higher then a mans height, to with-hold and keep in the wanto lasciniousnes both of his thoughts and eies, and to elevate the whole intention of his mind up to heavenly defires, that hee might whollie give himselfe to the service of God. But these are all made the ruines of time, as fithence many other Monuments haue beene, of worthy antiquitie.

(6) I cannot report that there are now many houses flanding in it, much leffe Townes or Villages. Only this, that it hath a Tower or place of Fortification be-longing vnto it, placed well-neere in the middle part of the lle.

The Emperor Antonine, having the rule and domination of France (at that hauing the rule and domination of France (a think it me called Came, from whence the word Galla is deriued) did name this Hand Sarnia, which afterward by the change of Times & corruption of languages, was long finec(and is at this day) called Carn[c].

(2) This life in forme and fathion flandeth in the Sea, much like to a Parke that is incompaffed round about with a Pale of Rocks, being very defentible winto the Hand from the attempting innountion of c nemies.

(3) The Aire and Climat of this Ile hath little or no difference in temper or qualitie from that of Info.

And this deferues to be remembered of it, that in this Ile is neither Toade, Snake, Adder, or any other venemous creature, and the other hash great plenty.

(4) It flandent for the most part vpona rocke, verienghis in many places from the Sca. (7) It hath a head of Land vpon the North part, thereof, the paffage into which is so narrow, that a man would thinke that at eury Tide (the Sea beating strongly on both fides) it were in a continuall danger to be fundred from the other part of the Ile. This place is called 5. Meisbad in the Fale, where (in former times) Mood a Priory, or Couent of religious persons, the ruines whereof are at this day to beelense.

(3) The gouernment of this Ile, in nature & forme relembles the other of Ist/ey, of whom shall be faid. The people are in their Originall and Language alike also, but in their customes and conditions they come of monument I finde not worthy to be recorded.

It hath ten Parilhes, and one Market Towne, being

CHAPTER III.

EMBROKE-SHIRE, the furthest Promontorie of all West - Wales, lieth parted on the North from Cardigan-shire with the riuers Tyuy and Keach, and on the East is confronted by Caermarden-fbire; the South and West shooting farre into the Irilb-Seas.

(2) The forme therof is longer then it is broads for from Saint Gouens South-point to Cardigan-bridge in the North, are twenty fix miles; the Easterne Landenie to S, Davids point in the West, are twenty; the

(3) Theaire is passing temperate, by the report of Giraldus, who confirmeth his reason from the site of Ireland, against which it butteth, and so neere adioined, that King Rufus thought it possible to make a Bridge of his Ships ouer the Sea, whereby hee might passe to Ireland on foot. (4) Anciently it was possessed by the Demetia, further branched into Cardigan and Caermarden-fibres as in that County hath beene faid, and in the Saxons Conquests and Heptarchie, by the Britaines forced into those parts for refuge, whither Henry the First, and third of the Normans King, fent certaine Flemings (whose Country was ouerwhelmed with the breaking in of the Seas) to inhabit the maritime Tract called Rosse, lying West vpon the River Dougledge. These Dutchmen (faith Giraldue) were a strong and stout Nation, inured to warres, and accustomed to seeke gaine by Clothing, Traffique, and Tillage, and ever readie for the Field to fight it out : adding withall, that they were most loyall to the English, and most faithfull to the English-men. Whereupon Malmesbury writeth thus: Mam a time which is to be wonted at promjacting his overty oritinal factors [b. But (laitch he) it may be the uneumness for of the ground, and sharpness of the aire, that maintained their courage, and impeached his values: which to redess [b. King Henry his brother found meaners; for those Etemings, who in regard of his mothers kindred by the fathers side, forely pestred and endammaged the English, hee sent into Wales both to purge and disburden his owne Kingdome, and to quell and keepe backe the courage of his enemies. These then heere seated, deceived not his expectation, but fo carried themselues in his quarell, that they seldome communicated with their neighbours, so that to this day they speake not the language, and the Country is did King William Rufus a faile the welfb, but ever in vaine:

which is to be wondred at confidering his other fortunate

vet called Little England beyond Wales. (5) The commodities of this Shire are Corne, Cattle, sea-fish, and fowle, and in Giraldus his daies of saleable wines, the Hauens being so commodious for

Ships arriuage : fuch is that at Tenby, and Milford, an Hauen of fuch capacitie, that fixteene Creekes, fine Bayes, and thirteene Roades, knowne all by fenerall names, are therein contained, where Henry of Richmond, of most happy memorie, arrived with signall hopes of Englands freedome from vnder the gouernment of an viurping Tyrant,

(6) Necre vnto this is Pembroke the Shire-towne

feated, more ancient in flew then it is in yeeres, and more houses without Inhabitants, then I saw in any one City thorowout my furuey. It is walled longwife, and them but indifferent for repaire, containing in circuit eight hundred and fourescore pases, having three Gates of paffage, and at the West end a large Castle, and locked-causey, that leads ouer the water to the decaied Priorie of Monton. The fite of this Towne is in the degree of Longitude, as Mercator doth measure, 14 and 55 minutes, and the elevation from the North-pole in the degree of Latitude 5 2.

(7) A Citie as barren is old Saint Danids, neither S.Danids.

lad with Woods, nor garnished with Rivers, nor beautified with Fields, nor adorned with Meadowes, but lieth alwaies open both to winde and stormes. Yet hath it beene a Nurserie to holy men; for herein liued Calphurnius, a Britaine Priest, whose wife was Concha, lifter to Saint Martin, and both of them the parents of Saint Patricke the Apostle of Ireland. Desit a most religious Bishop, made this an Archiepiscopall See, remooued from I fea Legionum. This the Britaint call Tay Dewy, the house of Deni ; the Saxons, Davio Mynpoep, we Saint Davids : a City with few Inhabitants, and no more houses then are inserted in the draught; yet hath it a faire Cathedrall Church dedicated to Saint Andrew and David, in the middest of mond, father to K. Henry the feuenth: whose Monument (as the Prebends told mee) spared their Church from other defacements, when all went downe vnder the hammers of King Hemy the eighth. About this is a faire wall, and the Bishops Palace all of free ftone, a goodly house I assure you, and of great receit, whose vincouered tops, cause the curious workes in the walles daily to weepe, and them to seare their downfall ere long. (8) But Monton the Priorie, and S. Dogmels, places of deuout pietic erected in this Countie, found not the like fauour, when the commission of their dissolutions came downe against them, and the axes of defurction can downe the props of their walles.

(9) This Shire hath beene firengthned with fixteene Cafiles, belides two Block-houjes, commanding the mouth of Milford Hauen, and is ftill traded in fine Market-townes, being divided into feuen Hundreds, and in them feated one hundred forty fine Parish-Churches, as in the Table annexed followeth.

Aermarden-shire, so called from the chiefe Towne Caer-marden, lieth borde-red vpon the North with Cardigan-fbire; vpon her East, by Brecknock and Glamorgan-shires; vpon the South, with a Bay of the British Seas; and vpon the West with Pembrookesbire (2) The forme of this County is long, and shooteth it selfe from the South-west into the North and by Eaft, betwixt whose furthest bounds are thirty fine English miles, and in her broadest part twentie; the whole in circumference about one hundred and two

(3) This Shire is not altogether so pestred with hilles as her bordering neighbours are: and those that she hath, neither so high nor so thicke, and therefore is better for Corne and Pasturage, yea and in Woods also, so that for victuals this Country is very well sto-red, which the stomacke doth as well disgest, the aire being wholefome, temperate, and pleafing.

(4) Anciently these parts were possessed by the Dimetree, as Ptolemie, Gildas, and Ninius doe name them: though Plinie holds opinion that they were

And ouer the fame vpon a hanging Rocke, standeth a very large Castle, from whole stone-wall another intermingled with Bricke rangeth about the Towne, being in circuit one thousand and foure hundred pases. The Inhabitants of this place doe not a little glory of their Merlin, who (as they say) was therein borne, the sonne of a badde Angell, or of an Incubus spirit, the Britaines great Apollo, whom Geffrey ap Arthur would ranke with the South-Saying Seer, or rather with the true Prophets themselues; being none other then a meere Seducer and phantafticall Wizard: which howsoeijet Alani de Infulis in his Commentaries hath labored to vnlocke those darke and hidden Similies, wherwith his booke is peftred and full, yet was it not without cause forbid the reading by the Councell of Trent, as vaine, and not worthy of countenance or credit.

At the entrance of the Normans, this Towne was brought vnder their obedience, and for a long time was diftreffed with the calamities of warre, yet afterwards was made by the English Princes the Chauncery and Exchequor for all South-wales: and at this day is yeerely gouerned by a Maior, who euer after is an Al-derman and Iustice of the Peace, two Sheriffes elected out of fixteen Burgesses, all of them in skarlet, a Sword-bearer, a Towne-clerke, and two Sergeants with Maces: from whence the Pole is raifed 52. degrees 15. minutes in Latitude, and for Longitude is in the degree 15, and 30. minutes from the first point in the West, according to Mercater. (7) East from this place are the Ruines of Carreg-Castle, which stood mounted on a high hill, under the which many vaults and spacious Caues fare into the ground are seene, wherein is thought the people vna-ble to fight, were therein secured in time of their wars. Where also is a Well (take the report from Giralduc who writeth it) that in this place twice in foure and twen-tie houres ebbing, and twice flowing, refembleth the wiftable motions of the maine Sea.

(8) This Shire is watered with twenty eight Riuers and Riverets of name, strengthned with ten Cafiles, traded in fix Market Townes, divided into fixe Hundreds, wherein are seated sourescore and seuen parish-churches, whose names are inserted in the Ta ble following.

AMORGAN-SHIRE

as some thinke named from Prince Morgan the possesser thereof, or according to others, is taken from Morgan an Abbey founded by William Earle of Glocester, vpon the Sea-shoare in the South of this

Shire, lieth bounded vpon that part altogether with the British Sea; the West by Loghor, is parted from Caermarden-fhire; the North butteth vpon the Countie of Breknok; and the East by Remney is divided from Monmouth.

(2) The forme of this Shire groweth still wider from her West-point, spreading her broadest touch in the East, betwixt which extreames I finde by measure to be well neere forty English miles, and from North to South, not altogether twenty. The whole in cir-cumference, about one hundred and twelue miles.

(3) The Aire is temperate, and gives more con-tent to the mind, then the Soile doth fruit or ease vnto Trauellers. The hils being high and very many, which from the North notwithstanding are lessened as it were by degrees; and towards the Sea-coasts the Country becommeth somewhat plaine, which part is the best both for plenty of Graine, and populous Inhabitants. The rest all Mountaine, is replenished with Cattell, which is the best meanes vnto wealth that this Shire doth afford; vpon whose Hils you may behold whole Heards of them feeding; and from whose Rocks, most cleere springing waters through the valleys trickling, which fportingly doe paffe with a most pleasant found, and did not a little reuiue my wearied spirits among those vast Mountaines, imploi ed in their fearch: whose infancie at first admitted an easie step ouer; but growne vnto strength more boldly forbad mee fuch passage, and with a more fterne countenance, held on their iourney vnto the British Seas: and Tane among these is accounted for a

(4) Vpon whose fall, and East-banke, the fairest Towne of all South-wales is feated. The Britaines Caerdid, the English Caerdiffe, which Fitz-Haimon fortihed with a Wall and Caitell, in the raigne of King Rufus, when he and his Norman Knights had ouercome Rusef the Prince of thele parts, and thruft out I estine from his lawfull possession. This Towne he made his owne Seat and Court of Iustice, enjoyning his Conforts to give aid to this honour, and to hold their portions in vaffalage of him, Strong was the Caftell, as by the trust therein reposed may well appeare, where the youngest brother Beauclark kept captine the eldest Curthofe, both of them fonnes to the Conqueror, the space of twenty fix yeeres. This Castell is large, and in good repaire, whence the Towne-wall went both South and East to the Rivers side, thorow which, foure gates enter into the foure windes, and containe in compasse nine hundred & twenty passes; and along the river (a sure defence) vpon her West side three hundred more: so that the Towne containeth in Circuit twelue hundred and fourscore pases. But as the Tane is a friend to the Town, in making a Key for arriuage of shipping; so is she a foc to S. Maries Church in the South, with underminig her foundations, and threatning her fal. The Town is gouerned by a Maior, yeerly elected out of twelue Aldermen, affifted with other twelve Burgeffes, a Towne-Clerk, foure Constables and two Sergeants with Mace : whose fire is The graduation observed from the North-Staire to lie in the degree of and f. of Latitude, 5 1 and 49. Scruples; and from the first point in the West, 16, and 52. Scruples.

(5) In the same Graduation almost is sited the Citie Landaf, wherein is a Caltell and Cathedrall Church, dedicated to Saint Telean, Bishop of the same, without any other memorable matter worthy the (6) But things of strange note are these, by the report of Giraldus, who affirmeth that In a Rocke or : life upon the Sea-side, and Iland Barry lying neere the South- Things officige East point of this County, is heard out of a little Chinke (let him take heed what he faith) the noise as it were of Smiths at their worke; one whiles the blowing of Bellowes to increase the heat, then the stroakes of the Hammer, and found of the Anuile; sometimes the no: (c of the Grind: stone ingrinding of Iron tooles; then the histing sparks of Steele gads, as they flie from their beating, with the puffing noise of flames in a Furnace. And whether this is the place whereof Clemens Alexandrinus speaketh, I determine clemen Alex: not; where in his writings hee hath these words: I her that have recorded Histories (faith hc) doe say that in the Ile of Britaine, there is a certaine Hole or Cane under the bottome of an Hill and on the top thereof a gaping Chineke, into the which, when the wind is gathered and toffed to and fro in the wombe or concauitie thereof, there is heard aboue a found of Cymbals; for the wind being driuen backe from his hole is forced to make a loud found at her went. (7) More Westward from hence, vpon the Rjuer

Ogmore, & neere vnto Newton, in a fandy plaine about an hundred pases fro Seuerne, there springeth a Well, though not of the elecreft water, where at the flowing and fulnesse of the Sca, can hardly any water be gotten; but at the ebbe and fail of tide, it walloweth vp amaine. The cause may be, as Polybius reports of Polybius the like at Cadys; Wherin the windy aire, who it is deprined of his wonted iffues, forcibly returneth, foutting and stopping up the passages and veines of the Spring, whereby the waters are kept in. But contrariwisc, who the surface thereof is void and empty of water, the veines of the Source or Spring, are unstopped and set free, which then boileth up in great abundance.

(8) And vpon the fame shoare more North and by West, on the top of a hill called Minyd-Margan, is Minyd-Margan erected a Monument inscribed with a strange Character, and as strange a conceit held thereof by the bydwellers, whose opinions are possessed, that if any man reade the same, he shall shortly after die.

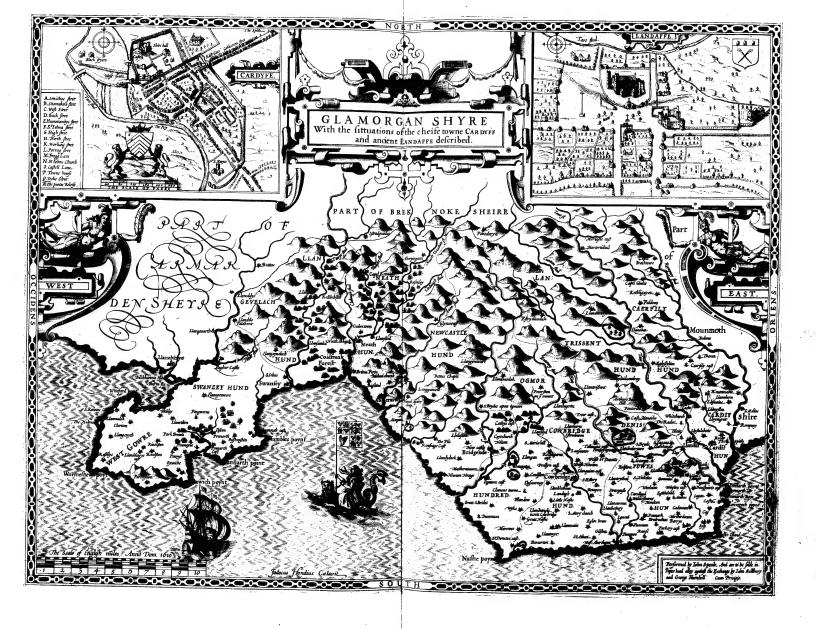

This Shire, as it is the furthest Coast of south-wales, and lay open to forraine inualion, so was it fortified with twenty fine stronger Castels, whereof times and formes have devoured the most : such were Barry, Saint Doneits, Denispowis, Morlashe, Menesse, Loghor, Llanddeny, Llanquian, Oxwich, Oyftermouth, Ogmor, Pile, Liandaesy, Lianquian, Oxwich, Officermonia, Ogmor, Euc. Porkery, Pennarth, Winfton, Newcafile, Caerfly, Coche, Pe-ullyn, Kethigarne, Kenfeage, Tallauan, Treer and Cothy. Neither was the County to ill feated for fufficien-ie of life, or barren of Graine, but that therein were planted places for dinine pietie : fuch were Neath, Margan, and Caerdif, besides the Episcopall See of Landaf; which last still remainerth; the other three suppreffed among the fall of their like, under King Henry

This Shire is divided into ten Hundreds, wherein are seated fix Market-Townes, and one hundred and cighteene Parish-Churches, as in the Card and Table annexed, more at large appeareth.

(3) The aire is temperate, healthfull and cleare, the foile is hilly, wooddy, and rich, all places fruitfull, but no place barren. The hilles are grafed vpon by Cattle and sheepe, the vallies are laden with corne & cartic and incept the values are faden with corne or graffe, neuer vingratefull of the Husbandmans pains, nor makes fruftrate his hope of expected increase; whose springs abundantly riling in this County with many streames, doe fatten the foile euen from side

(4) Anciently the Silures inhabited this Shire, whole chiefe City by the Emperous Antonine is named Venta Silurum, by the Welfb Caer-went, and was by Tathaie the British Saint, made an Academie, and a di-That the Britip Saint, made an extension, and a de-nine place for worship, So likewise Caer-lion now, once ifca, was, where the second Roman Legion called Au-gusta lay, as by their Coines, Altars, Tables, and In-scriptions there found, and daily therein digged yp, doth euidently appeare:

By the report of Giraldus, in this Citie was the Court of great Arthur, whither the Romane Embassadors reforted vnto him, and as Alexander Elfebiensis writeth, therein was a Schoole of two hundred Philosophers, skilfull in Astronomie & other Arts. Which is the more credible, for that Amphibalus, S. Albans inftructer, was therein borne, and Iulius and Aaron, two noble Proto-Martyrs of great Britaine, in this City receined the Crowne of Martyrdome, where their bodies were also interred. But as all things finde their fatall periods, fo this Citte for Beautie; Circuit, and Magnificall respect is laid in the ruins of her owne decay; neither may any more lament the loffe of glorie then

Monmouths Castle, which Captine-like doth yeeld to Memmanth conquering time. Her downe-cast stones from those Towne. ofty Turrets doe shew what beautie once it bare, standing mounted round in compasse, and within her walles another mount, whereon a Towre of great height and strength is built, which was the birthplace of our Conquering Henry the great triumpher ouer France, but now decaied, and from a Princelie | King Henry th Castle, is become no better then a regardles Cottage. In this Towne a beautifull Church built with three Iles is remaining, and at the East end a most curiously built (but now decaied) Church stands, called the Monks Church: In the Monasterie whereof our great Antiquarie Geffrey, furnamed Monmouth and Ap Arthur, wrote his History of Great Britaine: whose paines as they were both learned & great, so have they bred great paines among the learned, both to defend and to disproue. The Townes situation is pleasant and good, seated betwixt the Rivers Monnowe and Wye: three gates yet stand, besides that Tower or Locke of the Bridge, and a Trench or tract of wall running be-twist them on each fide downe to the Riuer, containing in circuit about eight hundred pases. The Towne is in good repaire and well frequented, gouerned by a Maior, two Bayliffes, fifteene common Counsellers, a Towne-clerke, and two Sergeants for their attendance. It is in Latitude removed from the Equator 52 degrees, & 8 minutes, and from the west point of Longitude is set in the degree 17, 36 min.

Religious houses erected & suppressed in this Shire for greatest account have beene in Caer-lion, Chepftow, Gold-clifte, Monmouth and Llantony; which last stood fo folitary and among hilles, that the Sunne was not feene to fhine there, but onely betwixt the houres of

This Shire is firengthened with fourteene Caftles, traded with fixe Market Townes, divided into fixe Hundreds, wherein are fituated one hundred twentie and seuen Parish Churches, and is not accounted among the Welfb-fires, being subdued by Henry the se-cond, who passing the Nant Pen-carne, a small Brooke and of no danger, yet held fatall by the Wellb, ouercredulous to a prophecy of Merlin Silvefler the British Apollo; who had foreshewed that when a frout & freckled fac'd King (fisch as Henry was) flould paffe ouer that Ford, then the power of the Wellbours flould bee brought vnder; whereby their flourcou-rage was foone abated, and the whole county the fooner in subjection to the English. The names of the places in this Shire are expressed in a Table, alphabetically gathered in the page infuing, vpon the reft of this Mappe.

RADNOR-SHIRE.

CHAPTER VIII.

The forme.

The circuit,

Polycrhon.

Adnor-Shire lieth bordered pon the North with the County Monmouth; vpon the East, toucheth Shrop hire and Hereford-Shire the Rivers Clarmen and Wye divide it from Breknok in the South: and the west part doth shorten pointvise into Cardigan-shire.

(2) The forme thereof is in proportion triangle, euery fide almost containing a like distance: for from West to North are twenty miles; from North to South, twenty two; and from South to West are twenty foure: the whole circumference extending to fourescore and ten miles, (3) The aire thereof is sharpe and cold (as most of Wales is) for that the snow lieth and lasteth long vn-The aire. melted vider those shadowing high hils and ouer-

(4) The foile is hungry, though not barren, and that in the East and South the best: the other parts are rough and churlish, and hardly bettered by painfull labour; so that the riches of the North and West confifterh chiefly in the brood of Cattle.

fifteth chiefly in the brood of Cardle.

(5) Anciently this County was poffelfed by the Silueria, warlike people, and great withflanders of the Romans impolitions, who had not only them to fight againth, but withall the vnaccessible Mountains, wherewith this Shire is 60 oner-peeffed and burdened, that many times I feared to looke downer from the hanging Rockes where-vnder I passed, into those deepe and ing Rockes where-winder I palled, into thole deepe and darke dales, feeming to mee an entrance into Limbo. Among thefe(as fly our Hilforium) that hateful Prince to God and Man, Vortiger, his Countries scourge, and last Monarke of the British Blond, by fire from Heauen was confumed with his inceftuous wife, from whom Ninius nameth the Country wherein his Cafile stood, Nimus nameth the Country wherein his Cafte 1000, Guartiger-Maur, of whole rubbish the Caftle Guthremion was railed, as some are of opinion. Yet they of North-Wales will have his destruction and Caftle to North-Wales will have his centraction and Capte to frand in their parts necre vnto Beth-Kelleck, whereof we will further speak in the relation of his life. Fatall was this place also to Lhewellin the last Prince of the British Race, who being betraied by the men of Buelth, fled into those vast Mountaines of Radnor, where by Adam Francton he was flaine, and his head (crowned with Iny) fet vpon the Tower of London.

(6) Places most worthy of note in this Shire, are is entueth: The first is Radner from whom the Countiereceiued her Name, anciently Magi, where the Com-mander of the Pacenfian Regiment lay, and thought to Notices. be the Magnos in Antonine the Emperours Survey. This Cambden. Towne is pleasantly seated vader a hill, whereon standeth mounted a large and strong Castle, from whose Bulwarke a Trench is drawne along the West of the Towne, whereon a wall of flone was once raifed as by the remaines in many places appeareth. In Tyny one of these, as Graldus hath written, the Beauer hath been found, a creature liuing both by land and water, whose stones the Phyllumg both by land and water, whose thones the Pay-fitions holdin great price. His for-feet are like vnto a dog, but the hinder whole skinned, as is the goofe, the dog-like ferues him on flore for tor unne, and the goofe-like as Oares gines him fwift motion in fwim-ming: his taile broad and griftly, he vfeth as a flerne, wherewith on the findden lice and diuert his jwift floating course. But this creature in these parts along time hath not been feene, whose roome wee may well say the Salmon hath possest, who still coueting into fresh water riuers, at their downe-right falles vieth this po-licie: He bendeth himfelfe backward, and taketh his taile in his mouth, and with all his ftrength vnloofing his circle on the fudden (as a lath let goe) moun-teth vp before the fall of the ftreame; whereupon fuch water-falles are called the Salmons leape; and in these rivers many such Salmons are caught, (4) The commodities of this Shire chiefly con-fift in cattle, sea-fowle, and fish; corne sufficient, but The Cammodiof woods fome scarcitie: and at the head of Istwydhare certaine veines of lead, a merchandize of no meane regard or wealth.

(5) The ancient people that possessed this Pro-nince, were the Dimeta, by Ptolemie branched thorow the Tracts of Caermarden, Penbrooke, and this Shire; who in their struglings against the Romans Shire; who in their trugings against the Komans, did not a little relie vpon Caractacus their most war-like King, (from whose name, though vnlikely, some will have the Shire called Cardigan) yet laftly felt the fortune of subjection with the rest, when Iulius Frontinus warred with these Mountaines. Scarce had the Normans fettled their Kingdome in Britaine, but that they affailed this Countie, as well to enjoy fo faire a Possession, as to secure those seas from enioy to faire a Policision, as to lecure thole leas from any inuation against them; to that Rulin in this wrested from the Pulli-men the maritime Costs, and Henry the First gaue the whole County to Gilbert de Clere.

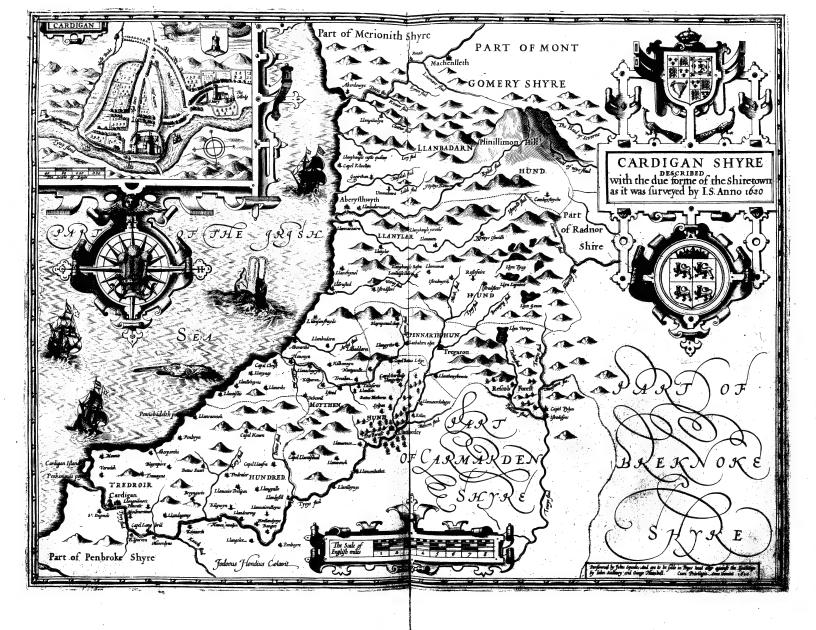

(5) This Gilbert fortised Cardigan the shire-towner with a Wall and from Castle, who for aged linearments with a Wall and strong Castle, whose aged lineaments doe to this day shew the industrie both of nature and doe to this day new the industrie both of hardrace art; for the Towne is feated you a fteepe banke, her South fide garded with the deep Riner Tyy, and pafable no way but by a bridge vnder the Caftle. The walles take the advantage of the rifing rocks, and circulate the Towne euen round about. The Castle is The Castle, higher built vpon a rocke, both spacious and faire, had not stormes impaired her beauty, and time left her carcase a very Anatomic. The walles range as thou seeft, and are indifferent for repaire, having three waies for entrance, and containe in compasse six hundred and fourescore pases: whose position for latitude is set in the degree 52. 33. minutes from the North-pole, and for longitude from the first Westpoint by Mercator, in the degree 15, and 10, mi-

(7) This Shire, as it is little in circuit, fo accordingly is besprinkled with Towne-ships, whereof foure only have the trade of Markets: neither finde l other remembrance of religious foundations, but at Cardigan, Istradfleet, and at Llan-Badern-Vaur, where fometimes was feated an Episcopall See, which (as Houeden writeth) was decased many yeeres since, when the people had wickedly slaine their Passour. And yet Llan-Deni-breni built, and so called in memorie of the most Doub-fress built, and to called in memore of the most frame all fishop of Chemeus, was in great e-freeme, where in a frequent Synod there holden her refuted the Pelagian Herefit, from sy pagine in British, both by the authority of holy Scripture, and is the standard is by miracle, as is reported, while the earth whereon he stood and preached, rose vp vnto a certaine height vnder his feet. (8) The Shires division, for businesses belonging either to the Crowne or Common-wealth, is into fiue Hundreds, wherein are seated soure Market-townes, and sixtie soure Parish-Churches for Gods diuine and daily feruice, whose names are further inserted in the Table following.

MOVNTGOMERIE-SHIRE.

CHAPTER X.

Ountgomery-shire in the Bri-tish speech called Siretrefaldwin, and that of the principall Towne Mountomery , lieth bounded vpon the North with Denbigh-shire, vpon the East with Shrop-shire, on the South with Radnor & Cardigan-shires, and on the West with Merioneth-shire. Welt with Merioneth-June.

(2) In forme it onnewhat refembleth a peare or pinc-apple, as it were growing out of the Welt, and riling thence with many high Hilles, and plentiall fiprings, which water and make fruitfull the folieurer, where: whole Earching rilles with a longedire halte euer forward to shade an encrease and to augment their growth into a bigger body, whereof the Seuerne is the chiefe and the second River in the Land: whose head rising from the spired mountaine Plymllimon, runneth not farre without the receits of other riverets into her streame, and with many windings doth sport her selfe thorough all the East part of

(3) That this River tooke her name from Abren, the beautifull base daughter of Loerinus, begotten out of wedlocke vpon Estrildis the daughter of Humout of wedtocke vpon Eftridus the daughter of Ham-ber the Seythian King, that inusded this Land, and both of them drowned in this Riuer by Guendeless King Loerinus furuiting widowe: let Ieffrey relate, and Poets enlarge, whereof one among them in good account, thus writeth:

Influmen pracipitatur Abren Nomen Abren fluuio de virgine, nomen eidem Nomine corrupto, deinde Sabrina datur.

Into this streame faire Abren head-long cast, Gauename of Abren to those waters wast, Corruptly call d Sabrina now at last.

(4) This River maketh the East part of this shire for fruitfulnes to be copared with most of the Land, and to exceed any other Shire in Wales: the West side and to exceed any other share in Water: ine Wett use is more Hilly and leffe inhabited, yet furely those mountaines breede innumerable of Cattle, especially of Horse, whose portrainare for making and incom-parable fwiftnes, Girddus Cambronie Arch-deacon of Berbacke doth greatly commend. (1) The ancient inhabitants that were seated in Guineth and Powisland, whereof this Shire was a part, were to the Romanes knowne by the name of OR-DOVICES, a Puissant and Couragious Nation, whose hearts and hilles held them the longest free whoir nearts and nines need them the longest need from the yoke of subjection, either of the Romanes or English: For vnto the daies of Domitian they kept Plea with the Romanes, and were not brought to the will of the English before the raigne of King Edward win orthe engine detorethe rangied to the first. Those Ordovices inhabited the Counties of Mountgomer, Merioneth, Caernaran, Denbigh, and Flint, which are of vs called now North-Wales, a people generous and of affable conditions, goodly for feature, faire of complexion, couragious of minde, courteous to strangers, and that which is most commendable, most true and loiall to the English Crowne.

MERIONETH SHIRE.

MERIONETH-SHIRE.

CHAPTER XI.

The forme

Wil. Malmf.

Erioneth-shire, which the Britaines call Sire-Verioneth, and in Latine Meruinia; is bordred upon the North by Canaruan and Denbigh shires, vpon the East with Mongomery, vp-on the South by the Ri-

uer Domy, is parted from

Cardiganfire, and the weft fide altogether washed with the Irifo-Seas, whose rage

idea laogether washed with he Triffs-East, who te rage with such vehemency beaters against her bankes, that it is thought and said, some quantity of the Land hath beene swallowed up by thois Sests.

(2) In former this Share somewhat resemblers a strell-Harpe, though small is the Musicke that to her Inflabitants the makes, being the roughest and most varplesiant to set to, sas sirablus their own Historian written) in all Wales. The aire for great pleasure, nor foile for great profits, I cannot greatly commend, valies it be for the many and mighty great winds, that for the most part thereind or age, and the spired hils clustered together, so never and so high, as the same Jashow altimeter, that site phendar by your their to so. Author aftirmeth, that shepheards upon their tops falling at oddes in the morning, and challenging the sheld for sight, before they can come together to try field for fight, before they can come rogether to try out the quarriel, the day will be fipen, and the hear of their fury flut vp with their fleepe.

(3) Thefe Mountaines formerly did abound with Wisters, for whole autodance, Edfar the penceable did imposit (as Malonesbay writett) an yeerely Tribate of three hundred Wisters, vpon Lawriell Prince of that Country, whereby in three yeers space they were quite delivoide? And now their faces are coured with fruitfull flocks of fleepe, belides neare and on-ther cartell that therein abundantly doe grafe, where-in the onely riches of this Shire dorh confilt: for by reaslon of the vneuennesse of the folie, and rocks so neer the face of the earth, the Plough cannot be drawne, or the Corne profess-which some hase imion never merace or the earth, the Plough cannot be drawne, nor the Corne profiper, which some haue imputed to the illdenesses of the inhabitants, wherein they haue been gerally wronge.

(4) These people are a part of the Ordonier, of Whom we have spoken, who by the advantage of these Mountaines held our with the longest against the Re-

mans, and their necks not brought vnder the yoke of bondage, before the daies of King Edward the first; fince when, they have attempted to cast off their subfince when, they have attempted to caft off their fubication to the English, you found firmer saided by o-wins Gleadoure, who hasting beene a fanourite of King Risbard the Good, and difcionented by King Henry the fourth, in a quarrell with the Lord Grey of Ruthin, that intruded you his demaines, quarrelled with the King, and entred into open rebellion and confederately with all other his rebells, faving the Wide most whollier to his fide, in hope to have had Princes reflored of their owne blood; and the maintained the fame with wonderfull pride, policie, and oblinacy for a long time, vntill his confederates, followers and fauorites, and his owne courage, credit, and maintenance, were brought so low by that powerfull King, that in

were brought fo low by that powerfull King, that in the end he perished for very want of foode.

(1) Their Towns are not many, neither shofe that they haue, of any starely buildings, where of Bada, Dadgelle, and Hartes are the nattees. By Badin the North-cast of this County, in the Welfu Linitegid, in Fanjsh Pimbe, mans, a great poole of water of Pimbe Town and the North-cast of this County, in the Welfu Linitegid, in Fanjsh Pimbe, mans, a great poole of water of Pimbe Town at least eight foore acres of ground; whose nature is, as the report of the plate, that the high-land floods though neuer to great, cannot make her to fivel bigger by their recents; but if the air be troubled with our great blasts and tempelts of windes, the in as great a rage rifect and passich the bankes, as if she would encouncer that enemy in fight. Into the South whereof the two headed Dae with a pretie sharp learner enterthe, and thorow the fame gliderth with-

South theme-neere Dolgelhe in a lower hill, a great Rampire of from and compaffe is feene, and harb beene fome for-tification or defence in warre; which whilst we were curious to finde out some instructions thereof, by report, this onely we learned, that it was called Caddo-ryrita Dren, according to the name of her neighbour and farre higher hill.

(6) Vpon the weft, and Sea-shore of this shire,

Harleeh a Market and Maior Towne standeth, bleake enough and barren, but only for sowle and fish, tougin and parten, joint only to fowle and fills, house not many, neither curiously built, wherein flandeth a little chappell decaied and without vie, in which lite thouried 5*n* itslead 7 timbeliepe, an English Knight, who for the delight her tooke in that game, remooned his abode from a farre better follelled the control of the cont Herera 2100 tanderha most ftrong and beautifull Ca-/ld., mounted youn a hill, and with a double Bul-warke walled about, commanding the Sea and gal-lage of entrance of fuch as feeke to inuade the Coast. And furely a great pity it is, to feel fo fairer a worke fall to decay the Conflable whereof by Paten is sear the Maior of this Towne, necre vuto which are two great Inlets of Seas, which at low water may be paffed vp-on the Sands with Guides. Vpon whole fhore, as vpon all the Sea-coast, in this County, abundance of Ferrings are caught, for which cause they are much frequented in the feation of the yeere, by many peo-ple from diurer Countries. ole from divers Countries,

Enbigh-shire, called in Welsh, Sire Denbigh, retiring more from the Sea within the Countrey, on this fide of the river Conarey shooteth Eastward in one place as farre as to the River Dee : on the North, first the Sca (for a finall space) and then

Flint-shire encompasseth it : on the West, Caernaruon

Finst-fine rencompatient it: on the Welt, Carmanus and Maximath-fine 2, on the East, Codiniva and Strong-fine; and on the South, Manutyamery fine;

(2) The formet thereof is long, growing wider fill towards the North-welf, and narrower towards, the East. It is in length from East to Welt, one and thirty miles, and in bredch from North to South, fectors are also in the whole ferrini and cryonical strongers and in the Welt of the South file. uenteene miles : in the whole circuit and circumference, one hundred and foureteene miles.

(3) Theair is very wholefome and pleafant, yet bleake enough, a sexpoled to the windes on all fides, and the high hilles, wherewith it is in many places enuironed, long retaining the congealed finow. The toppes whereof, in the Summer time are the harvefteness Almanacks, by the riling of certaine vapours thereon in the mornings, and foreflew a faire day lenfisine.

(4) The foile is but barren towards the Weft part; yet the middle, where it lieth flat in a valley, is most fertile. The East-fide, when it is once past the valley, findeth Nature to be a very sparing inguard of her fanours: but next vnto De it feeleth a more liberall extens of her bleships. The Weft part is but here and there inhabited, and mountesth vp more then the other with bare and hungry hilles; yet the leanneast of the foile (where the hills settle any thing Aartish) hath beene now a wood while beeque to bee leanneite of the foile (where the hils fertie any thing flattish) hath been now agood while begun or bee, ourcrome by the diligent paines and carefull indufrie of the husbandmen ; for they paring away the vpper coat of the earth into certaine Turtes, with a broad kinde of pade, pile them yo artificially on heaps, and fire them, lo as being turned into after. and throwneypon the ground so pared, they fructify the hungrie barrennesse and sterilizie of soile, and make the Fields bring forth a kinde of Rie or Amellcorne, in such plenty as is hardly to be beleeued,

(5) The ancient Inhabitants of this Countrey were the Ordonices, who bee also named Ordenices, or Ordonices: a puissant and couragious people, by reason they kept wholly in a mountainous place, and tooke heart euen of the foile it felfe: for they continued longest free from the yoke both of Roman, and also of English dominion. They were not subdued by the Romans, before the daies of the Emperour Domitian (for mans, before the dates of the Emperon Dominant then Islius Agricols conquered almost the whole Na-tion) nor brought under the command of the English before the raigne of King Edward the First; but lived a long time in a lawlesse kinde of libertie, as bearing themselues bold vpon their owne magnanimitie, and themletues bold vpon their owne magnanimitie, and the ftrength of the Country.

(6) The Mountaines of this Country yeeld fufficiencie of Neat, Sheepe, and Goats. The Vallies in most places are very plentious of corne, efficiallie Eathward on this fide, betwits the runers of enter and Day have the more sufficient in both of the sufficient of the suffici Dee south the more westerly part is healthy, and alto-gether barren. The heart of the Shire shewes it selfe beneath the hilles, in a beautifull and pleasant Vale, reaching seuenteene miles in length from South to North, and fine miles, or thereabouts in bredth, and lieth open onely toward the Sea. It is enuironed on cuery fide with high hilles, amongst which, the highest is Moillenly, on the top whereof is a warlike Fense with Trench and Rampier, and a little Fountaine of cleere water. From these hilles, the River Clayd re-

forts vnto this Vale, and from the very spring-head (increased with beckes and brookes) doth pare it in twaine, running thorow the midft of it; whereof in ancient time it was named Strat Cluyd: for Marianus maketh mention of a King of the Strat Clayd of the Welfb. And at this day it is commonly called Diffryn

Cluyd, that is, The Vale of Cluyd.

This thing is worthy observation, as a matter memorable, both for admiration and antiquitie, that in the parish of Llan-sanan within this Country, there is a place compaffe cut out of the maine rocke by mans hand, in the fide of a fronie hill, wherin there be foure and twenty feats to fit in, fome leffe, fome bigger, where children and young men, comming to feeke their cattle, vie to fit, and to have their sports. And at this day they commonly call it Arthurs round Table.

(7) Henry Lacy Earle of Lincolne, Obtaining Denbigh by the grant of King Edward the First, after the connection and beheading of David brother of Liewellin for high Treason, was the first that fortified it with a wall about, not large in circuit, but very strong, and on the fouth-fide with a faire Castle, strengthned with many high Towers. But he gaue it ouer, and left the worke vnfinished, conceiuing griefe (as a forrowfull father) that his onely sonne came to vntimely death, and was drowned in the Well thereof. The death, and was drowned in the Well thereof. The fame of this Towne fpreads it elife faire for repute, as being reckoned the most beautifull place in all North-Wades and it is of no lefte report, for the Caltle adunct vinto it is impregnable for tortification. And this fittings accident happing there in the yeres 1775. deferred so not be omitted, being left as a continuall remembrance of Gods mercifull proudence and preferration are the time, the misses of the control fernation at that time: that where by reason of great earth-quakes, many people were put into great feare, and had much harme done vnto them both within and without their houles, in the Cities of Torke, Worand the whole that notes, in the these of tore, woresfer, Gloteffer, Briftow, Hereford, and in other Countries adiacent, yet in the Shire-hall of Dembigs the bell was caused to toll twice, by the shaking of the earth, and no hart or hindrance at all either done or recei-

ned. The gouernmen of this Towne is managed by two Aldermen, and two Bailiffes, who are yeerely ele-cted out of twenty fine Burgefles, that are their Afsistants. It hath one Recorder, one Town-Clerke, and Hans, trnatione Recover, one town-cerecinal two Sergeants at Mac: and by observation of the Mathematicks, the Pole is clevated in the degree of Latitude 53, and 49, scruples, and from the first West

(8) This County, with them of Flint and Carner-som-fisters, are not dissided by pricks into their feuerall Hundreds in their Cards, according to the reft of this worke, the want of their particulars in the Parlament Parlament and Carners in which the the node of the form Rowles fo caufing it, which for the good of these threeShires, I earnefly sought to have supplied from the Nomina villarum, in their Sheriffes bookes, and had promise of them that might easily have procured the same. But whether a searclesse icalousie possessed the Bane. But whether a faratelfic isalousite poffeffed their fipritise, left briches of their Shires, by reucaling finch particulars, should be further fought into, I can off any set this I have observed in all my Surue, that where least is to be had, the greatest feares are pofferfed. Take theffe Shires therefore to bee done as I could, and not as I would, that with both the wealth the shires therefore to be the wealth of the shires therefore to be the said to could, and not as I would, that with both the wealth the shires therefore to be the said to could, and not as I would, that with both the wealth the shires the shires the said to the shires the of them all, and their esteeme to bee of better regard by those that may doe them good.

(9) This Shire then is divided into twelve Hundreds, for the readier ordering of businesses necessary to the State of the Country, wherein are placed three Market Townes, fit for buying and felling, and other negotiations. It hath fine Caffles to defend her felfe, Caffles. and to offend her enemies, and fiftie seuen Parishes for Gods dinine service and worship, as this Table more particularly expresseth.

(7) Places of defenfe are the Castles of Flint, Hawarden, vulgarly Harden, Treer, Rudland, Mold, Towley, and Hope: of which, Flints and Harden are the two principall. The Cattle of Flint, famous for the benefit is received from two Kings, and for the refuge and releefe it gaue vnto the third. It was founded by Hemr the Second-finished by Edward the First, and long after gaue harbour and entertainment to that noble, but vnfortunate Prince, Richardthe Second, comming out of Ireland, being within her walles a free and ab folute King, but no fooner without, but taken prifoner by

As was that which standeth in a certaine strait fet about with Woods, heere vnto the River Alen, called Coles-bull, that is, Coles-bill, where the English, by reason of their disordered multitude not ranged close in good array, lost the Field, and were de feated, when King Henry the Second had made as great preparation as might be to give Battle vnto the Wells, and the very Kings Standard was for faken by Henry of Effex, who was Standard-bearer to the Kings of England in right of inheritance

(8) This Country hath many shallow Rivers in it, but none of fame and note, but Dee and Cluyae. Howbeit, there is a Spring not farre from Rubland Caftle, of great report and antiquity, which istermed Font Sacer, in English, Holy Font Sacer, Well, and is also commonly called S. Wine frids Welltof whom antiquity thus reporteth : That Winefred a Christian Virgin very faire and vertuous, was doted upon by a young luftfull Prince or Lord of the Country, who not being able to rule his head-strong affections, having many times in vaine attempted and tried her chaftitie, both by rich gifts and large promiles, could not by any meanes obtaine his defirest hee therefore (in a place of advantage) (uddenly furprized and rauished her weake (yet resisting) body. After the deede done, the cruell Tyrant, to stoppe her cries and acclamations, flew her, and cut off her head: out of which place did fuddenly arife a Spring that continueth to this day, carry-ing from the Fountaine such a forcible streame & current, as the like is not found in Christendome. Ouerthe head of the Spring there is built a Chapell of free stone, with Pillars curiously wrought and ingraued, in the Chancell wherof, and glatle window, the picture of the Virgin is drawne, ous, but blinde deuotion, and divers others refort to bathe n, holding firmely that the water is of much vertue. There bee many red stones in the bottome of this Well, and much greene mosse growing vpon the sides: the super-fittion of the people holding that those red spots in the stones were drops of the Ladies bloud, which all the water in the Spring can neuer wash away and that the moste about the wall was her haire, which though some of it be given to the wall was her haire, which mongon more or to eguen to every firanger that comes, yet it never waferb. came Lords thereof, it was tearmed Anglefey, as one would fay, The Englishmens Iland.

For, an Iland it is, albeit it be seucred from the continent of Britaine, but with a finall and narrow streight of the river Menai, and on all other parts beaten upon with the furging and troublous Irish fea,in which it lieth fomewhat fourre wife, not much different in length and breadth; beeing, where it reacheth out in length, from Beau-marifh eastward, to the vtmost Promontorie westward, which we cal Holy-head, twenty miles; and in breadth from Llanbaderik northward, to the point of Menai fouth-ward, seuenteene miles; the whole circuit or circumference amounting towards scuenty miles. The aire is reasonable, gratefull and healthful, and not generally subject to diseases, excepting certaine Agues at some times, which are occasioned by the Fogs and milty exhalations, which arise from the sea called Mare Virginium, with the which this lle is encompassed.

The commodities that commend, (or rather beautifie) this Country, are in Corne and Cattle wherewith it not onely enricheth it felfe exceedingly, but sendeth out great proussion thereof to others to supply their defects, and although the ground may seeme drie and stony, or unpleasant and nothing sightly, wherein for the outward quality, it resemble the some other parts of Wales, that are not so fruitfull, yet for the inward bounties of nature, it is farre vnlike: for aboue all the coasts of Wales it is most plentifull of Wheat, insomuch as by Giraldus Cambrensis report, they are wont to say in Welfb, by way of a prouerbe, Mon Mam Cymbry, which is to fay, Mon is the mother of Waler: for , that when other Countries haruest failes round about, or their prouision is exhaust & drawn drie, this alone like a prouident, and full-brefted mother, is able to sustaine the rest. Whereunto Nature most prouidently hath added another benefite seruiceable and necessary to the former, in that the Country produceth also those kind of stones which fome not long fince beganne to make Alom and Co-perofe, who (like vnflesht fouldiers) gaue ouer their enterprise without further hope, because at first they faw it not answere their outrhasty expectations. The ancient inhabitants of this Country were the Ordonices, mentioned before in the precedent prouinces of Denbigh-shire, Flint-shire, and Carnaruon-(bire. And this very Iland was that ancient, and fo much enobled feat of the British Drugds, who so amated the army of Romane invaders, as Tacitus reports, and as ellewhere wee have related in the fixt are called Molares, as of all other fittest to make Mil-stones or Grind-stones. In some places also it

yeeldeth an earth of Aluminous quality, out of which

booke and seuenth Chapter of our ensuing history. This Nation was attempted first by Paulinus Sue Romainettatonius in the raigne of Nero, but brought under the Romane Empire by Iulius Apricola. When the Empire of the Komanes in Britaine began to decline and goedowneward; some our of ireland entred into this Ifle by ftealth, and neftled themfelues there, as may be gathered by certaine mounts of earth entrenched about, and yet to be seene, which they call the Irish mens Cottages; as also by a place named of the Irill men, yn Hierrey Gwidil, who did there (as is recorded) put the Britaines to flight vnder the leading of Siriem. The Norwegians also were often infestous to this Iland; but King Ethelreds Fleet, having in the yeare 1000. scowred the seas round about this life. far exceeded all both wife and Norwegian depopulatios, for they wasted the country in al hostile maner, After this, two Hughs both Normans did great afflict this Iland; the one being Earle of Chefter. the other of Shrewsbury; at which very time Mag-nus the Norwegian arriving there, that Hugh Earle of Shrewsbury through with an arrow, and departed after hee had ranfacked the Hand. It was afterwards grieuously intested by the Englishmen, who neuer gaue ouer from time to time to inuade it, vntil in the raigne of King Edward the first, it was wholly brought under his subjection.

The principall towns in this Isle is Beaumarish. which the faid King Edward the first built in the east. fide thereof, and for the faire lituation, though in a morish place, gaue it the name which it now beareth, whereas in times past it was called Bonouer; which he also fortified with a goodly castle.

The Major is the chiefest Magistrate of the town. who is yearely chosen, and hath the affistance and helpe of two Bayliffes, two Sergeants at Mace, and one Towne-Clearke: by whose carefull diligence the affaires of this towns are orderly managed and commanded, whose latitude is 5 4, and longitude 15,

Not farre from hence is Lhaannais, in times past a faire religious house of the Friars Minors, which although it bee now in a manner raced out of memorie, yet antiquity maketh mention that it hath beene of great regard among the Kings of England, who haue shewed themselues very bountiful Pa-trons vnto that Couent, both in respect of the fan-Eumonious life of fuch as converfed there, as also because there the bodies of very eminent persons, as the daughter of King Iohn, the sonne of a King of the Danes, as likewise of many great Lords, Knights and Squires were enterred, that were flain in the wars against the Welfb, in the time of many illustrious Kings

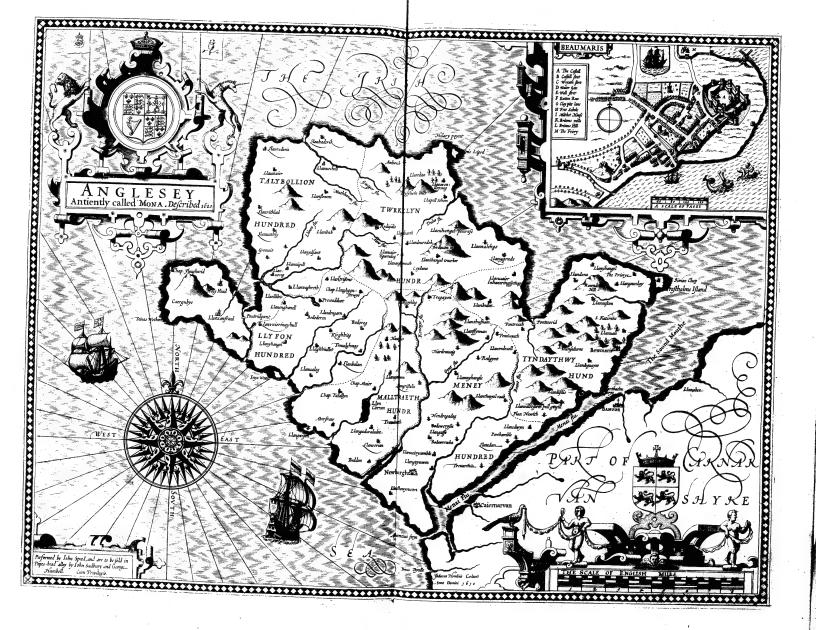

This Isle is reckoned to have had anciently many villages in it, euen to the number of three hundred threefcore and three; and the same euen at this

The putition of this Ifle for disposition of affairs that belong either to the state of the crowne, or to this shie, the condition of the Country, is into fixe Hundreds: in which are feated two market townes, and fenenty foure parish Churches for Gods divine honour and worship, as is Alphabetically gathered in the Table

CHAPTER I.

Cotland, the fecond Kingthe north part of the Iland, hath on the East, the German Ocean, on the North, the Orkneys & Deucalidon Sea, the West affronted with Ireland, and the South hath the river Tweed, the Cheuist hils, and the adiacent tract, reaching to the Sulmay fands, whereby it is separated from England.

(2) This Kingdome is faire and spacious, and from theic South-borders spreadeth it self wide into the East and West, till againe it contracts it selfe narrower vnto and Weft, till againe it contrach it cleit narrower vatoo the Northerne Promontoniess frumified with all things befitting a famous Kingdome, both for ayre and foile, etcome to plenteous, that it implies the end of the contract of the cont beene performed, but that they were with the first, and last in the field. Their Nobility and Gentry are verie natin the field. INET NOBILITY and Gentry are verie fludious, of learning, and all citil knowledge, for which end they not onely frequent the three Vniuerfities of their owne Kingdome (S. Andrews, Glafe, and Edwards, Carlon and Car forraine Countries,

(3) The Counties contained in this Kingdome are many, and every where bestrewed with Cities, Townes, and Burrows, as is that of England: and, as England, I entended to describe it, had I not beene happily preuented by a learned Gentleman of that Nation, who hath moftexactly begunne, and gone through the greatest difficulties thereof; to build vpon whose foundations, I hold it injurious; and am so farre from any ambition to preuent his Noble purposes, that I heartily wish all happie furtherances thereto, with a longing defire to fee, by his industrious labours, another Scene added to the perfecting of the Theatre of Britaines Glory,

Amongst the things worthie of note of antiquity in this Kingdom, most memorable was that fortification this Kingdom, mod memorable was that fortification advant from Jeterner vp onto the Trith of Edenberger, in a consideration of the Constitution of reterited at Limitory and Lister, and with the manifering cope Monument of an high and round compas, which, as forme think, was a Temple confectated with the Gad Terminus: others, 2 Topher ratified by Cavality, who fortified this wal with feuen Castles, as Nimins doth

(12) At this place beganne the great and darke Wood Caledonia, famous for the wild white buls that therein were bred, whose Manes were Lion-like, thicke and curled, of nature fierce and cruell, and so hatefull to mankind, that they abhorred whatfoeuer was by them handled or breathed vpon: these woods stretched farre and wide with many turnings, darke shades, and dread-full dens, and so famous in the Roman writers, that they often ysed that name for all Britaine; whose inhabitants were the laft in this Iland, that yeelded their necks to the yoke of subjection, as shall appeare in our following

(13) Ninian a Britaine is recorded to have converted the South-Pitts vnto the faith of Christ, in the raigne of Theodofius the yonger, and the Church in Galloway bearing his name doth witnes it : fo likewife in the fame age Palladius sent from Pope Calestine, became an Apostle Passaus tentron rope casejum, pecame an Apottie who the Sease, whole refugues by enflinited at Fordon in Merni, as was verily fuppofed: but that Chriffianity had been formely planted in this vertemost Province, is tellfied by Tervallian, in faying the Britaines had em-braced the faith further then the Romans had power to follow, or perfectute them, whereupon Peter Monke of follow, or perfectute them, whereupon Perer Monke of Clus in Spain concluded their countefion to bee more ancient then the Southerne Britaines, (14)But couching things obliverable for the prefent, furely admirable is the report of the plenty of Cattle Fift, and Foule there abiding; their Near but little, yet many in number; Fift he plentifull, that men in Jone places (for delight) on horbetack hunt Salmons with Spears: & a certain foule, which fom call Soland-geefe, fpreading fo thicke in the aire, that they euen darken the Suns light; of whose flesh, feathers, and oile, the the Suns lights, of whole fleth, feathers, and oile, the inhabitants in fome parts make great vie and gaine; yea and etten of Filhes brought by them, abbundant prodution for diet, as also of the files (brought to make their netl-) plentfull prouision for fewell.

(13) With thele, as of wonders, might feeak of the natures of these two famous Loughes, Lemmadand MPsfl, the latter whereof, neuer freezeth in winters, though neuer fo extreame, and the waters of the other most raging in the faireft and calmeft weather, wherein also flotten an Iland that remouth from place to place, as the wind forceth her spongeous and vnfastened body. In Bagabban vpon the bankes of Ratra is a well, whose In Daymons you the Bankes of Autra's a well, Whole trickling drops turn(in Piramidy-wife) into hard flone, and another neere Edenbrough that floteth with Bitsumen. In Dee and Done, befides the admired plenty of Salmons, is found a Shell-fush, called the Horse-majkell, wherein Pearles are engendred most pretions for phisicke, and some of them so orient, that they give not place to the choifest.

(16) No lesse strange then any the forementioned waters, but more lamentable is the remembrance of the waters, but more lamentable is the remembrance of the great inaudation, happing by the fuddine rifing of Tey, which bare away the walles and Towne of Berth, and with it the cradle and yong fine of King William into the fex, wherein the rold Infian with many others perifled, the thing and his Counters havely desping the danger, the King and his Counters havely desping the danger, the King and his Counters havely desping the danger, the King and his Counters havely desping the danger, and the King and the Counters have the counters are the famous, and the counters have the counters are the counters and the same of the counters are the counters and the counters are the counters are the counters and the counters are the counters ar called Saint Iohns-town.

(17) Ilands and Ilets yeelding both beauty and fubiection to this Scottish kingdome, are the Westerne, the Orks.syes, and the Shetlands, reckoned to be about three hundred in number; their inhabit ants for the most part ving the frugality of the ancient Scot,

(18) The Western, lying scattered in the Deucalidoni-an sea, were anciently ruled by a King of their owne, whose maintenance was out of their common costers, and the regall authority neuer continued in lineall fuccession, for (to preuent that) their Kings were not permitted to have wives of their owne, but might by their redemption. The refidence of those fore mentioned kings, was chiefly in lla,Bunals, and losa, now Columb-kil, where (25 Donald Munro, who trauelled through the flands reported) have three Tombes, having the feuerall inferiptions of the Kings of Scotland, of Ireland,

(19) Among these Westerne Hands, the Hebrider, Skie,
Mula, Ila, and Arran, are the greatest All of them plentifull of corn, woods, Salmons and Herrings, as others of Conies, Deere, Horses, and Sheepe, where in some they are wilde, and in others without any owners; but the people vnciuil, and lacking religion, they rather line rudely in state of necessity, then as Lords of these porti ons which God hath allotted them; and with a fufferable eafs, ignorant of ambition, eniory those contentinents, which fome others (though they no great furnme) do more laboriously attains winto by the preceptes of Philosophie: for, feeding themselues with competency without any excess, they returne all the outer-plus vinto their Lords, as does the inhabitants of Hirta and Rons; bur alas, Religion not knowne among them, thefe penurious vertues are rather the curfes of Cham, then the followings of Christ, who forbids vs to be too careful

(20) The Iles of Orkenay vpon the North of Scotland, lying in a most raging and temperatuous fea, are about 32 in number, whereof 13 are inhabited, and the other replenished with cattle: in these are no venemous serpents, nor other vgly vermin; the aire sharpe and helthfull, and the foile apt to beare onely oates and barlie, but not a flicke of wood : among these, Pomonia is the grea-test, accounted and called the Maine-land, affording fixe Minerals of Lead and Tinne, and in her chiefe Town mre Mineran of Leas and Times, and miner enter a town a Bilhops Secwherein are feated 12, parifi Churches, one of them very magnificent for for remore a Country. (21) Of all the Romans, Inlins Agricula first discoursed the Orkosty, yea and fubbased them, if wee will beleeue Tacism: but Pomponius Mela that wrote 50/years before him do he manifor them and Tumestil the Medica. fore him, doth mention them, and Iunenal in Hadrians time after him, tels vs the Roman had won them, and fo doth Ninius name Odha, 80:Ebiffus, Saxon command ders, who in their rouing Pinnaces walted the Orknays. der, who in their rouing Pinnaces walted the Orleany. Their lands Douadd Base the Viture of the Scientific Cowne, gaue to the king of Norway for his affithnes, and by the Norwegians were they held the space of an hundred and fuxty yeeres, wrill that Altexador'he third king of Sestanda, with fivor and normpointion got them from Magnus the fourth, king of Norway, which afterward king Hagasia constituend vin Norway, which afterward king Hagasia constituend vin Norway, which after but lastly Chrijkhau the first, king of Norway, which after but lastly Chrijkhau the first, king of Norway & Domarsk, but the his constituent of the state of th expresse, lie the Isles of Shetland, of some thought to bee Thule, and by the Commenter vpon Horace, the forts-nate Iland, where as Tzetzes fabuleth, the fouls of good men are ferried into those Elizian fields that ever grow greene, and whence Islins Cafar could hardly bee drawne, as Muretus hath written: but their fictions drawne, as Mareten ham writtent Dut their nettons intended only, that the vertous foules of the dead, paffed the vittermost bounds of earthlie abode, and attained to an ouespleasing report, & cuer flourishing happines; which whether they borrowed from the deferption of Paradife (take both for a faire garden, & the fouls happy and the state of the state o ref()) cannot define; but fure they would not have made those fields alwaies greene, if they had feene how they lie euer courted with lie and fnow, being in the 63, degree of latitude, as Protomie hash placed it, where (for the protony) is a comitted. the most part) is a continuall winter: but for proofe that this was the Thule, besides Prelomies positure, Saxo Grammaticus betwixt Normay and Scotland hath placed Grammaticus Detwikt Ivormay attu Scottam mate piaced it, and Solimus, two daies failing from the point of Caledonia: and Tacinus faith, that the Romans kenned Thule a far off, as they failed about Britain by the Oreades and laftly, Mels maketh it to face Berge a City in Norway.

The dinere

The aire.

He Traditions of time have deliuered vnto vs diuers names . whereby this famous Island is recorded to have beene called, yet none of more faire proba yet none of more faire proba-bilitie, then that of Orpheus, A-riffente, and Claudian, by whom it is named I E R N A: by Inse-nal, and Mela called I V V E R-

N A: by Diodorus Siculus, I RIS: by Martin of Heracle IOYEPNIA: by Euftaching, OYERNIA, and BER-NIA: by the native Inhabitants, ERYN: by the Brittaine YVERDON: the Welfb-Bards in their Ballads, TIRVO LAS TOTIDANAN, and BANNO. & by the English, IRELAND: but from wheee these diversities were derived arife many opinions: Doubtles it is, that Hibernia, Inuerna, & Ouernia, came from Ierna, spoken of by Orphem, & Aristotle, & the same Ierna, as also Iris, Inerdbon, and Ireland, from Erin; the terme that the Inhabitants now vie. From this Erintherfore(a word proper to the Nation)the originall is most likely to bee

(2) Some deriue Hibernia, from Hiberno tempore, that is from (2) Some define riverme, from Airerra tempore, that it, non-the winer featon flower from Hiberru 2 Spaniard; fome from a a Dukenamed Iranlph; fome 2 gain from the ancient river Ibe-rus, & fome from Hire, an Irah word, which fignifieth the well or a western coast, whence Eris may also seem to fetch the de-rivation: for it lieth furthest Westward of any Region in all Fusions for it leich furthet! Wellward of any Region in all Europe; as allof or these the inter tunning in the most remote well-part of this lland, is in Paslome called Lerustille, as the furthet wellerne Promotory in Spass, from whence our Irih men came, is by Strabe called Lerus, and the internext vanie, by Media Lerus; yea and Spasses; left for the lowlefterne fituation is called Helperus; the useft Cale of Irike! Helperius; and in Germany, Wifferds and Weißbonless from their position have their names. Published cannot have atthe followed bits owns fewer than 18. readings in Paris rather followed his owne fancy, then the judgement of or there's fetcheth the original of Ireland from the Hebrewessas if Irin flould be as much as Invin, that is the Inver land; which opinion I hold no better, then those that would have it from the Winter-like flormes, although vpon every wind the Aire is cold there.

(3) Festus Austrus in that little booke which he intituled Ora Maritime, calleth Ireland, Sacram Insulam, that is the holy Jland : to which opinion the people are foone drawne, by reason of the many Saints that the Iland is said to produce, and the bleffed foile that affords no venemous Creatures to retaine life. It is thought that Plut arch meant Ireland by his No venemous Oggeia, for her great antiquity, and of later times by Ifedore and Bede, it was called Scorna, of those Scotsthat inhabited it. and that thence the name of Scotland together with the Scots themselues came into Britaine.

(4) For largenetic and circuit, intimes paft this Iland chal-lenged the third place in ranke of all the Iles of the then knowne World: for thus have Geographers left vs, that the tretand the third Indian Taproban for greatnes was the fift: the Ifte of Burtilland for large-taine the next ; and this of Ireland the third; and for that cause doth Ptolomy call it the little Brittaine. of Gurgantine, King of the Bruenes, after that Ireland had been venemuch dispropled by a contagious peffilence, feated themselves; and from the eldest, Hibering, called the Island Hibernia, as some are of opinion: these divided the whole into fine Provinces famouffic knowne by the names of Mounter, Leinster, Connaught, Vifter, and Meath in their midt; and from these the present Iris repute them-Ireland divided felues to come. Yet forely as I make no question, burthat this Ifland became inhabited cuen of old time, when man kind againe ouer-spred the face of the earth, so doubt I not, but that our Britanes pailed thereinto themfelues, such infinite number of words in the Irif language yet in vie, fuch ancient names of Waters, Ifles, Mountaines, and Piaces, meerely Brisip words yet remaining, and the tellimonie of Tacitus; who faith, that their manners were fafinoned to the Britanes, inforceth fo much ; and Ptolomie before him, calleth that I fland by the name of little Britans all which flew a former interest for Ireland, then that which by conquest under Henry the second was made.

(13) That it ever was subject to the Romanes, is doubt full, though Agricola did wish it, and Tacina held most necessarie; yes and in the division of their Empire, Ireland with Britane, and Thule, fell vito Confluctine the fonne of Conflanting the great; yet their manners ynreclaimed, and barbarilme retained long after those daies, doe witnelle no fuch civilitie fowen, to bee in that plot : But when Rome. great Empire begane to grow leffe, the Scots or Septhian. grew mightie in Ireland : and as Orofins writeth, that Island was wholic inhabited by the Scartil Nation in the dates of Honorius, and Arcadius, the Emperors: whose warres and flaughter, Claudian doth lightlic touch in this his verfe. (15) But from the le ancient and barbarous maners, let vs come to the conditions of their middle time : whom Gir. sidus Cambrenfis describethas followeth. The Irifi (aith Giraldus Camb. he) are a strong and bold people, martiall and prod gall in warre, nimble, flout, and baughty of heart; careleffe of life, but oreed; of gloris ; courseous to thrangers, conftant in love light of beliefe, imparient of murre, ginento fleshie lufts, and in committe implasible. that they held it very ominous to give their neighbours fire vpon May day; to cat an odde egge, endangered the death of their horfe; and before they call in their feed they fend faltinto the field; to hang up the faells in the roofe was a preferuative of the chickens from the kite; to fet up greene boughes at their doores in the moneth of May, in creafed their kines milke 3 and to fpit vpon Cattle they held it good against Witchery, whereof Ireland was full.

(17) Superflitious Idolatry among the wild Irifb was ommon, yeelding divine honour vnto the Moone after the change, visto whom they both bowed their knees, and made supplications; and , with a loude voice would thus freake vnto that Planet, We pray thee leane vs mas good effare as 1000 foundf vs. Wolues they did make their God-fibs, terming them Charl Chrift, and so thought themschies preserved from their hurts: the hoofes of dead horfesthey accounted and held facred: about Childrens necks they hung the beginning of Saint Johns Gofpell, a crooked naile of an horseshow, or a peece of a Wolues skin, and both the fucking child, and nurle, were girt with girdles, finely placed of womans haire: fofarre they wandred into the waies of errour, in making thefe armes the ftrength of their healthes.

(18) Their wines were many by reason of dinorcements, Many wines. and their maids married at twelue yeeres of age, whose cuflomes were to fend to their louers, bracelets plated, & curioully wrought of thir owne haire, fo farre following Finns in the knots of thefe allurements. The women wore their | Theattire of the haire plated in curious manner, hanging down their backs and shoulders from under foulden wreathes of fine linnen, rolled about their heads, rather loading the wearer then delighting the beholder; for as the one was most feemely. fo the other was vnfightly : their necks were hung with chaines and carkaneths, their armes wreathed with many bracelets, & ouer their fide-garments the fhagge rug mantels purfled with a deepe Fringe of diuers colours, both fexes accounting idlenetle their only liberty, and eafe their greatest riches.

(19 In warres they were forward, and fought with battle ixes, whose bearers were called Gallog laffes, the common fouldier but lightly armed, who ferued with darrs and tharp skeines; their Trumpet was a Bagge pipe, and word for encounter, Pharrob; which at the first onset with great acclamation they vttered, and he that did not, was taken into the aire, and carried into the vale of Kerry, where transformed(as they did believe)he remained untill he was hunted with hounds from thence to his home.

(20) For the dying and dead they hired women to mourn who expostulated with the sicke, why hee would die; and dead, at his Funerall fuch outerieswere made, fuch clapping of hands, fuch howlings, and geftures, that one would thinke their forrowes varecouerable, holding the opinion of Pythager at for the foules departed.

(21) Their diet in necessity was flender, feeding vpon water-creifes, rootes, mulhiomes, fhamrogh, butter tempered with oate-meale, milke, whey, yea and raw flesh, the bloud being crushed out: their vie was also to let their Kine bloud, which standing a while, and comming to a elly, with butter they did eate, as a very good difh.

(21) That the Golpell of Chrift should be preached in Ireland by Iames the Apoftle, I will not affirme, though Vincentius hath faid it; neither will J with the Scott bring the Ilands conversion from a Christian woman, who as their Historians do auouch, first instructed the Queen, & the Queen her husband, & he again his Subjects, til al became Chriftians : But moft true it is, that the Scots firft receiued the doctrine of Christ in this kingdome of Ireland; for thus writeth Prosper: Calestin Pope of Rome sent his Arch-deacon Palladius into Brittaine to withstand the Pelagian herofie, who at one time did drine out these enemies of grace and ordained a Biftop among the Scott, whereby that bar barous Nation imbraced Christianis. Yet Ninius teporteth that Palladise did nothing in neither, being taken away by votimely death: but that S. Patricke borne at Esburne in Cluedidale, the fonne of Calphurm, by the fifter of S. Martin, was the first Apostle for Ireland, who sowed his heavenly feed with fuch plentifull increase, that the foile it selfe shortly was called Santtorum patria, the Countrie of Saints: for whose Sepulchre after his death rose as great variance, as was for Homer amongst them of Greece: they of Downe challenged his graue to be with them, vpon certaine verles written on a Tombe, which aferibes Patrick, Briget and Columbe to bee buried therein; they of Armagh lay claime, by the warrant of Saint Bernard, who faith that Patrickem bis life time there ruled, and after death there rested; Glascenbury in England by ancient records will haue his body enterred with them; & Scotland augucheth his birth to bee at Glafes, and bones to reft at Kirk-Patrick with them; of fuch reuerend efteem was this Irif Apostle.

(23) This Parrick in his youth had been taken Captine by the Irib Pirats, and for fix yeeres continuance ferued Macbusin as his flane, & keeper of his fwine : in which dejected condition, to defirous he was of the lands faluation, that in his dreams he thought the Infants vnborne cried vnto him for Baptilme, and redeeming himfelfe thence for a peece of gold found in the field, which a fwine had turned up, in his aged yeeres came backe againe into Ireland, preached the Gospell, conuerted the people; and lastly became Arch . bishop of Armagh; of whose miracles and Purgatorie I sleaue others to speake, that are more credulous in the one, & hath better leafure to relate the other, and will fhew thee Ireland as now it is, first in generall, and then in parts.

into Ireland, by whom it was manfully defended from the fierce affaults aswellof Aufconlph Prince of the Dublinians, as afterwards of Gostard King of the ifles : fince which freland, time it hath fill augmented her flourishing estate, and gi-uen approued testimony of her faith and loialty to the Crown of England, in the times of any rumultuous streights and commotions. (11) This is the roiall feate of Ireland, frong in her munition, beautifull in her buildings, and (for the quantity) matchable to many other cities, frequent for trafficke, and intercourse of Merchants: In the East suburbs Henry the fecond King of England(as Housden reporteth)caufed a roi-all palaceto bee etechediand Hemy Loundres Archeifton of Dinelin built a Storehouse about the yeare of Christ, 1220. Dinelin. Not farre from it is the beautifull Colledge confectated vnto the name of the holy Trinity, which Queene Elizabeth of famous memory dignified with the priniledges of an V-niuerfitie. The Church of S. Patrick, beeing much enlarged by King Ishn, was by Ishn Comin Archbishop of Dublin borne at Enesham in England, first ordained to beea Church of Prebends in the yeare 1191. It doth at this day main-tainea Deane, a Chanter, a Chancellor, a Treasurer, two Arch-Deacons, and twenty two Prebendaries,

This City in times past for the due administration of Ciuill Government had a Propost for the chiefe Magistrate. But in the yeare of mans redemption 1409. King Henry the Henry the fourth fourth granted them liberry to choose every veere a Major and two Bayliffes, and that the Major should have a gift word carried before him for euer. And King Edward the ixt (to heape more honor vpon this place) changed the two Eward the fixe Bayliffes afterwards into Sherifs: fo, that there is not any thing heere wanting that may ferue to make the effate of a City most florishing.

(12) Asthe pople of this Country doe about the neighbouring parts of Disselin come neerest who the civill condi-tions and orderly subjection of the English: so in places far-chereous one ther off, they are more tumultuous, being at deadly feuds amongfi themlelues, committing oft times Man-liaughters one vpon another, and working their owne mifchietes by mutuall wrongs: for for the Lifth of Lenfter walfed Leinfter with many Townes in the fame Province in the yeare 1294mongst themselves, committing oft times Man-slaughters

And in the year 1301.the men of Leinster in like manner ratfed a watte in the winter feafon, fetting on fire the Town of Wykinle, Rathdon and others, working their own plague and punishment by burning vp their fustenance, and losing their Castle by depredation.
(13)Matter of observation and no lesse admiration among them is the Giants dance, commonly fo called, and fo much talked of, which Merlin is faid by Art Magick to haue traffated out of this territory vnto Salsbury plain; which how true it is, I leane to the vaine beleeners of miracles, and to the Credulous observers of antiquitie.

(14) In this County have beene erected many famous The religious (14.) in this Councy have been erected many ismous Monalteries, Abbies and religious houles confecrated to deuous and holy purpotes: As the Monaltery of Saint Maniero of Onlineary, founded for preaching friers, rance which of late dates the tudiciall Courts of the Kingdom have bene translated also the magnificent Abbay called 3. Chap.4. THE PROVINCE OF CONNAVGHT. His Province named by Giraldus Cambrensis, Conachtia, and Conacia, by the Irifo, Conaughty, and by Engliftmen Connaught; is bounded eaftward, with part of the County of Leinfer; northward, with part of vifter. Conacia, by the Irish, Conaughty, westward, with the west-maine Ocean; and on the fourth, it is confined with a part of the Pronjnce of Mounster, closed in with the river Shannon, & butting against the Kingdome of Spaine. (2) The formethereof is long, and towards the north & fouth ends thin and narrow; but as it grows towards the middle, from either part it waxeth still bigger & bigger: extending in length from the river Shannon in her fouth, to Enis Kelling in her north, 126. miles, and the broadest part is from Tromor in her East, to Barragh-Bay in her West, containing about fourescore. The whole in circuit and compasse is aboue foure hundred miles. (3) The aire is not altogether so pure & cleare, as in theother Prouinces of Ireland, by reason of certaine moilt places (couered ouer with graffe) which of their foftnes are viually tearmed Boghes, both dangerous, and full of vaporous and foggy mifts. (4) This County as it is divided into feueral portions, so is every portion scuerally commended for the foile, according to the feafonable times of the yeare. Twomond or the County Clare, is faid to be a country fo conveniently fituated, that either from the fea or foile there can be nothing witht for more, then what it doth naturally afford of it selfe, were but the induftry of the Inhabitants answerable to the reft. Galmay is a land very thankfull to the painful husbandman, & no lesse commodious and profitable to the shepheard Maio, in the Roman Provincial called Mageo, is replenished both with pleasure & fertility, abundantly rich in Cattle, Deer, Hawks & plenty ofhony. Slege (coasting upon the Sea) is a plenteous country for feeding and railing of cartle. Le-Trim(a place rifing vp throughout with hils) is to ful of ranke graffe and forrage, that (as Solinus reporteth) if cattle were not kept fomtimes from grafing, their fulnes would endanger them. And Roscoman is a territory, for the most pare plain and fruitful, feeding many heards of Cattle, and with meane husbandry and tillage, yeelding plenty of corne, As every particular part is thus feuerally profitable by inbred commodities; so is it no lesse commended (in the generality) for the many accommodate and fit Bayes, Creekes, and nauigable Rivers, lying vpon her Sea-coasts, that after a fort inuite and prouoke the inhabitants to naugation. (5) Such as in ancient time made their abode and habitations in this Prouince, were the Gangani, who were also called CONCANLAVTER I.& NAG-NAT Æ. As the Luceni (that were next neighbours vnto them) came from the Lucenfy (in Spain) to those Gangani, and Concam may sceme a so to have fercht their derivation from the Concani (a nation of the felf same country) both by the affinity of name, and vicinity of place. In Strabo, according to the diversity ofreading, the same people are named Coniaci & Co. nife: & Silius testificth them at the first to have been Seythians, & to have vied ordinarily to drinke horses bloud(a thing nothing strange among the wild Irifb euen of late daies.) And some may also happily sup-pose that the Irish name Conaughty, was compounded of Concani and Nagnata: Howlocuer, it is fure that these were the ancient Inhabitants of this Country, as is to bee feene in Ptolomie (6) The Principall City of this Province & which may worthily bee accounted the third in Ireland, is Galway, in Irifh, Galline, built in manner much like to a Tower. It is dignified with a Bishops See, & is much frequented with Merchants, by reason whereof, and the benefit of the road and hauen, it is gainful to the and divided as enfueth. Inhabitants through trafficke and exchange of rich

fmal in-lets and out-lets, in a rew, are the Hands called Arran, of which many a foolish fable goes as if they wer the llands of the lining, wherin none died at any time; or were fubicet to moreality; which is as superstitious an observation, as that yied in some other corners of the country, where the people leave the right arms of their Infants males vichriftned(as they terme it) to the end Afoperfitious that at any time afterwards, they may give a more deadly, and engratious blow when they strike: which things do not only flew how palpably they are carried away by traditious obscurities, but doe also intimate how full their hearts bee of inuctorate reuerige. (7) This Prouince presents no matter more worthy of memory, then the battle of Knoe-toe (that is) The hill of Knoe-toe axes, under which, the greatest rabble of rebels, that were euerseene before in Ireland (raised and gathered together by the arch-rebels of that time, William Burk O-Brien, Mac-Nemare, and O-Carrol) were after a bloody ouerthrow discomfited & put to flight by the noble feruice of Girald-Firz-Girald Earle of Gildare. And the fup pression of certain trifb (the posterity of Mac-Willid) who vitirping a tyranny in these parts, raged somtimes upon | The rebellion o themselus, with mutual injuries, & oppressed the poore the posts people a long time with extorting, pilling & spoilingsto as they left scarce one house in the country vnristed, or vnrased; but were bridled and repressed (cuen in our remebrance) by the feuerity & resolution of the Commisfioner of those times, who in his wisdom and policy well understood, that their excessive insolence, & those their vniust doings, wold be a means to draw the people away from the due obedience to their Prince : fuch therefore as refused to obey the laws, and sided with the tumultuous, with all care and diligence he foon feattered, forcing their Forts, and driving them into woods, and lurking holes (for troubling the bleffed estate of tranquillity)til the L. Deputy, who took pitty of them, ypon their The Rebels feat humble supplication, commanded by his missites, that they should be received upon terms of peace. But they being a stiffe neckt people, tooke armes againe, entred a fresh into actual rebellio, drauc away booties, made foul vprores, & vpon faire promifes procured the aid of the Scotift Handers from out of the Hebrides: wherupon the afech. Gouernor affebled an army, & purfued them with fuch powerful violence through the woods and forrests, that after 6.or 7.weeks, being gricuoufly hunger bitten, they fubmitted the felues in al humility, a ne suanis, allo of the Seois, he by day and night affronted fo neer, & agains, and we received. submitted theselues in al humility. The auxiliary forces had kild & drownd about 3 000. of the in the river Moin. Three thousand (8) About the year 1 316. there was fuch a great flaugh- Scott drowned ter made of the triff in this Prouince of Consught throgh a quarrel that arose therebetween two Lords or Prin the triff of Consught through ces, that there were flain on both fides about 4000 men; | xavgbr. and so great a tribulation at that time came upon the people, that they did denour & eat one another, so as of 10000 there remained not about 300 living. And it is reported for truth, that the people were then so hunger starued, that in Church-yeards they tooke the dead bodiesout of their graves, and in their feuls boiled the flesh & fed vpon it :yea, and that women did eate their owne children. Thus appeared the ire and anger of God, in punishing their fins, and feeking their conversion. 9 Places memorable, arc, I sig Ceath, welknown by the Monastery of Colm's (a deuour Saint) founded for Scots I su Ceath. & Englishmen; and Inis Bouind, which Bede calleth white Inis Bouind, Calfe Ifle. Alfo Maio, a Monaftery built (as Bede writeth) for 30 men of the English nation. Likewise the Ba-ronie of Boile under Curlen hils, where in times past was Curlew hils, a famous Abbey built, together with the Abbey of Beatitude, in the yeer of grace (152. These Abbais & Monafteries erected at the first for religious services, and Beattude. through ignorance & other obscurities diuerted fince vnto superstitious vies, are now made the ruines of time. Their ancient cultome in making their King, was this. A white Cow was taken, which the King mult kill, and feeth the famein water whole, then mult bee bath himselfie therein starke naked; and sitting in the Cawdron wherein it was fod accompanied with his people round about him, hee and they yied to earthe fielh and drinke the broath wherein they yield to earthe nein and offinke the Divolar wherein he fat, without cupor diffu, over for hand. So also S. Patrickes Purgatorie (a thing of much note in the track of this Province :) is a vault or narrow caue in the ground, neere a Lake (called Erne Lyf-fer) much spoken of, by reason of (1 wot not what) fearefull walking spirits and dreadfull apparitions, (or rather some religious horror) which)as fome ridiculoully dreame) was digd by Fife when hee went downe to parley with those in hell. This is the caue which the inhabitants in these daies call Ellann' Frugadory, that is, The Isla of Purgatorie, and S. Patrick: Purgatory: for some persons lesse deuout then credulous, affirme that S. Patrick (or rather Patricius Secundar an holic Abbat of that name) labouring the conuerfion of the people of this Province, and much inforcing

the lifeto come, they replied contemptuouslie vntohim, that valetle they faw proofes of these joies and paines hee

preached, they would not lofe the possession of their prefent pleafures, in hope or feare of things to come, they wift not when. Whereupon (as they fay) he obtained at Gods hands by earnest prairer, that the punishments and torments which the godlesse are to suffer after this life, might bee there presented to the eie, that so hee might more cassly roote out the finnes and heathenish errors, that flucke fo fall in the hearts of the Irif. But touching the credit hereof(although common fame, and fome records doc viter it) I neither will vrge the beleefe, nor regard, feeing it is no article of our creede. (8) Matters memorable within this Province, are thefe: Matters memo

First, that the Bishops of Ireland were wont to be cosecrated rable. by the Arch-bishop of Camerbury, in regard of the Primacy The Arch-biwhich they had in this Countrey; vntill such time as John Papirio a Cardinall was sent thither from Pope Eugenius the fourth, to reforme Ecclesiastical discipline in this Hand, which was then growne so loose, that there were translati which was then growned 1901s; triat there were training-ons, and pluralities of Bifhops, according to the will and pleaface of the Metropolitane. (9) The principal place in this tract, is Armago neere who the river Kalin, which (albeit it maketh a poore flew) is the Archiepifeopal See and Metropolitane of the whole Island. Before S. Patrick had built there a faire City, for site, forme, quantity, and compaile, modelled out (as he (aith) by the appointment and direction of Angels, this place was named Drumfalich; the Irifb tell much that it received the name of Queene Armacha : But the better opinions are that it is the fame which Bede calleth Dearmach, and out of the Scould and Fife language interpretent it The Field of Oaker. Here(as S. Bernard writeth) S. Parick (the Apostle of Ireland) tuled in his life time, and rested after death: In honor of whom it was of fuch venerable estimation in old time, that not onely Bifhops and Priefts, but Kings also and Princes were (in generall) subject to the Metropolitane thereofin all obedience, and to his Gouernment alone.

Among the Arch-bishops of this Prouince S. Malachy is famouled, who first prohibited Priests mariage in Ireland, and (as S. Bernard Laith, who wrote his life at large) borrowed no more of the natiue barbaroufnes of that Countrey, then Sea fiftes doe faltnes of the Seas, Alfo Richard Fiez- Rithard Fitz Raij Real/(commonly called drivensessam) to framous memory, who turning theedge of his ftyle, about the yeer 1355, began to oppose his opinion against the Order of Mendicans Frier, as detelling in Chesilians, such voluntary begging. The chief Fort in this track, is Exis Kelling, defended by the Babellin in Avert 1500, and won his Dundled month.

PROEME. THE LEARNED OVERS

GREAT BRITAINES GLORY.

Auing thus farre trauelled in the protract, and description of this famous Empire of GREAT BRITAINE, I might here have rested, and claimed the priviledge that yeeres and imbecillitie have brought me vnto: had not a further defire in others vrged it a matter incident, historically to lay downe the originals of those Nations and fuccessions of those Monarchs, which either by birth or conquest have aspired to the Imperial Crowne.

And albeit I finde my selfe both tired in the former, and most vnsit to prosecute this latter, yet will I endeuour to give herein my best assayes, though as my labours, so my wants also, thereby will be made more vulgar to the world. For if those men were blame-worthy against whom Heraclite exclaimeth, who Heraclite with long toile and great trouble finde a little pure substance in a great deale of base earth: how shall I then free me from the like imputation, that from so many mines of pure mettals, haue gotten so little Oare, and the same neither well tried in my defective fornace, nor yet artificially cast off through the default of the mould, wanting both skil for to fashion, and measure to performe, the true proportions that in such a project is to be required; and how often these my defetts have disswaded my proceedings, is best knowne to him that is the fearcher of the heart.

But by what fate I am inforced still to goe forward, I know not, vnlesse it be the ardent affection and loue to my native Country; wherein I must confesse that Nature in those gifts hath bene both liberall, yea and prodigall, though Fortune as sparing & falt-handed against me, ever checking the Bit with the Raines of necessity, and curbing the meanes that should illustrate my labours: which moves me sometimes to thinke that if the great Philosopher Theophrastus, had cause on his death- Theophrastus, bed to accuse Nature, for giving man so long a lesson, and so short a life; then I against Fortune, may as suffly exclaime, that hath assigned me so great a labour and so little meanes. And therefore let it not seeme offensive that I draw my maters from the Ceflerns of others, who am not able to fetch them at the spring-head my selfe: Neither that I strike vpon the same Anuile vnto their found, though nothing so loud, nor with the like strength, wherein yet this fruit at least wil (I hope) redound of my en-M m. 2.

free the face drawne by Apelles, from the censure of the fault or defect in the foot, and not onely to amend, but even to new-mould the whole. Which thing though my 2.50m.19.35. dayes are neere spent; and with Barzillai I may say that musicke to me is now unplea-

ling: yet doth my eare thirst after the set of that straine, as Socrates thoughts ranne euer on his Booke: who the night before he was to suffer death, was desirous to learne musicke, because he would die learning still something. Moses when he foresaw the destruction of his Common-wealth, which whilst it stood, was the glory of the earth, and a paterne to all kingdomes succeeding, left this for a Law among the rest, and even to remaine for euer, that the fathers should teach their children, and should commit unto writing those things which the Lord in their dayes had done, and enjoyned the children. Likewife to enquire of the times that were past, euen from the first creation of man: For when as Empires and Kingdomes, Common weales and Cities, do end and perish, yet the Histories

Dest.4.32. thereof do remaine and live; And that made Cicero to fay as he did, that Salamina should be otterly forgotten, before the things that were done in Salamina_should perish: And therefore as among the wife answeres of Thales, the Histories of Countreis are to be accounted for principals, either as Cicero calleth them the Mistres of life, and expositions of Times; so likewise let vs from the lyricall Poet Simonides learne this further, That he Simonides. is perfettly happy which knowes his native countrey to be truly glorious. And as Caßidoro calls Callidore. him a worthy (itizen that feeketh the commodity of his countrey: So contrariwise he is by Bale esteemed but a fruitles clod of earth, that sucks the sappe of his soile onely to himselfe, Bale in Ley-Lands New whose memoriall shall perish as the dispersed smoake in the clouds, though for a time yceres gift. he mount aloft in his swelling pride. This naturall love and true affection to our natiue Countrey, we may further learne from the ancient Patriarks and Fathers themselues, who besides a desire that they had to theirs, continually to liue therein during life, commanded their bodies to be buried therein after death: from whose Bowels they first had assumed their breathes, and in whose bosome they layd their bones, as in their last bed of rest. Yea, of the vnreasonable creatures, the Birds and Beasts, we may learne this loue, that alwayes are willing towards their home. And if it happen that Countreys grow vinkinde as Homers did, that in his old age and blind, suffred him to beg his bread; or that a Prophet in his owne countrey is not esteemed, as Feremy felt it, Matt.13.57 and CHRIST IESVS taught, yet did the one for his peoples captivity, wish his eyes a fountaine of teares, and the other for his countress destruction lamented and wept, holding it unlawfull to take the childrens bread, and to give it unto others. Matt. 15.26. That this our Countrey and Subject of History descrueth the love of her inhabitants, is witneffed even by forraine writers themselves, who have termed it the Court of Queene Ceres, the Granary of the Westerne world, the fortunate Island, the Paradise of pleasure and Garden of God : whose Typographicall descriptions for the whole Iland, and Geographical furueyes for the seuerall parts, exceed any other kingdome vider the cope of Heauen; that onely excepted which was conquered and divided by Fosuab; And for fruitfulnes and temperature may be accounted another Canaan; watered with rivers that doe cleave the earth, as the Prophet speaketh, and make the land as rich and beautiful, as was that of Egypt. Our Kings for valour and Santity, ranked with the worthiest in the world,

Gene.13.10 and our Nations originals, conquests, and continuance, tried by the touch of the best bumane testimonies, leaue as faire a Lustre vpon the same stone, as doeth any other, and Tho.Lanquet with any nation may easily contend (saith Lanquet) both for antiquity, and continual inhabitants, from the first time that any of them can claime their originals.

And although our many Records are perished by the inuations of strangers, through their couetous Conquest of so faire a Land; or in the civill diffensions of homebred aspirers that haue fought the possession of so rich a Crowne, yet Truth hath left vs no sesses beholding vnto her, then mightier Nations, and them that would be far more famous. Neither that haue bene kept with a stronger guard, as Titus Liuy in the entrance of his Hiflory affirmeth of the Romanes. As for those things (laith he) as are reported either before, or at the foundation of the City more beautified and fet out with Poets fables, then grounded vpon pure and faithfull reports, f meane neither to averre nor disprove. Of whole uncertainties, let vs a while heare the reporters themselues speake, before we proceed to the certaine successions of our British Monarchs: vntill which time the credit of our Hiflory may wel be faid to waigh with (if not downe peize) many others. Varro (that learned Romane writer, who lived an hundred yeeres before the birth of our Saujour (brist) Hilloria we calleth the first world to the Flood uncertaine; and thence to the first Olympias fabulous: Because in that time (saith he) there is nothing related (for the most part) but fables the Flood with among the Greekes, Latines, and other learned Nations. And therefore Plutarch begin. neth the lines of his worthy men, no higher then Thefeus: because (laith he) what bath Phutarch. benewritten before, was but of strange things, and sayings full of monstrous fables imagined and deuised by Poets, which are altogether uncertaine and most untrue. And Diodorus Si- Diodorus Siculus (that lined in Augustus Cafars time, a great learcher after Antiquities, and for thirty yeeres continuance a traueller into many Countreys, for information and further satisfaction) writing his History called Bibliotheca, conteyning forty Bookes, and yeeres of continuance one thousand, one hundred thirty and eight, of his first fixe himfelle giueth this censure in his Proeme. These Bookes (faith he) contayning the Ads of ancient men , before the destruction of Troy, with the ancient Histories as well of Grecians as Barbarians, are called fabulous: Which mooned Lucretius the Poet to demannd this question.

(ur supra bellum Thebanum & funera Troia, Non alias quondam veteres cesinere Poeta? Why have not Poets in their workes of fained stories brought.

Things done before the Warres of Thebes, or Troyes destruction wrought?

Yea and of Troyes story it selfe, if we may believe Thucydides (whom Bodine | Thucydides. commendeth for an absolute Historian) though it be ancient (faith he) yet a great part thereof is fabulous. And Tully out of Plato complayneth of as much: For you Grecians Tully. (faith he) as children in learning, deliuer onely things uncertaine, and haue mingled fables with the Warres of Thebes, and of Troy, things (perhaps) which neuer were, but gathered out of the scattered Verses of Homer and others, not digested by Aristarchus, and are yet vncertaine and obscure. And that the Greekes indeed were but babes in Antiquity, Fosephus in his Nations defence against Appion, sufficiently doth proue, where he affirmeth, That the invention of their Letters was not so old as the siege of Troy, insomuch that

And Titus Liuy their famous Historian, freely confesseth, That the wie of Letters and Times Lini, learning among the Romanes, was rare and hard to be found before the taking of Rome by the Gaules. Yea, and of the uncertainty of Romes foundation, how lauish so euer Historians haue written, not onely Fenestella. hath continued whole Pages, but Plutarch Fenestella. likewise in the life of Romulus, hath many sayings, whereof this is one. The Historio- life of Romulus. graphers (faith he) do not agree in their writings, by whom, nor for what cause the great name of Rome (the glory whereof is blowne abroad through the world) wasfirst given unto it: some affirming, that the Pelagians after they had runne over a great part of the world, lastly stayed themselues in that place where Rome was new built, and for their great strength in Armes, gaue name to that City Rome, which signifyeth power in the

Being by the Almighty so set in the maine Ocean, as that she is thereby the High Admirals of the Seas, and in the terrestrials Globe so seated, as that she Seas, and in the terretirial Giobe to teated, as that the isworthily reputed both The Garden of Pleasure, and The Storthouse of Profit, opening her Hauens energy way, fit to receive all forraine trafficke, and to veter way, in corrective an iorrame transect, and to viter her owne into all other parts: and therefore (as the Sourciagine Lady and Empress of the reft) deserves our description in the first place.

that he had found out another World: for to his fee-ming it appeared, that the Ocean was rather contained In Panegy. Orat. within that Mayne, then that Mayne to be compassed with the Occan about. And Inline Solinus, for her circuit and largenesse, saith that it deserueth the name of Another World. But Ariffides a Greeke Author speakes much more properly, who by way of excellencie termeth BRITAINE, The Great Iland. As likewise Tacitus, that vndertooke to describe BRITAINE B RITAINE by his owner knowledge, who faith, that of all Ilands knowen to the Romanes it was the greatest And fo Romanes to the Romanes it was the greatest And fo doth Dionysius in his description of the World.

And this of them is rather valike to either, if wee speake of the whole, which then was vnknowen, as it seemeth by wnoe, which fine was viknowen, as it feemeth by Tatista. (4) Some haue beene induced by the narrow-neffe of the Sea, and likeneffe of the Seile, to thinke that BRITAINE was sometimes joined to the continent of France: whereunto Servius Honoratius sub-scribeth in his Commentaric vpon the first Eclog of rat. Virgil, who there mentioneth

— Penitas tota duifos or be Britatnor,
The Britaine people quite from all the world diffioind.
As likewise by Claudian another ancient Poet it

— nostro deducta Britannia mundo, The Britaine soile removed from our worlds continent.

And Vinianus with them affirmes, that in the beinning Britaine and Gallia were both one Land. The like doth Virgil verific of the Ile of Sivilie, which in sieille thought like doth Pitzil vertic of the 1st of Stitie, which in stitute spath for reports to have been one with Italic. Others hold, that all Isaach had their first leparation Dominal Dominal Office the theory of the trage of the general Dislays, Nagar, and that the mountaines thereby hewed their tops. Thoughte from bourted plaine grounds, and the plaines felting low-lawral Bloods and the plaines for the transport of the plaines for the transport of the state of th er, became deepe vallies. custome of kissing in salutations came, after the example of these wives, who to appeale the busbands wraths with smiles and imbracings kissed their mouths. Some will have the name from Roma the daughter of Italus and of Lucaria, or els of Telephus the sonne of Hercules, and of the wife of Eneas. Others of Ascanius the sonne of Eneas. Some againe from Romanus the sonne of Ulysses and of Cyrce, wil haue it named Rome. Others from Romus the sonne of Emathion, whom Diomedes sent thither from Troy. There are that bring the name thereof from one Romus a tyrant of the Latines, who droue the Thuscans out of those parts. And they who thinke that Romulus (as that is most generall, and carieth the most likelihood to be Romes founder,) do not agree about his auncestours, as more at large in Plutarch appeareth. And therefore with Thucydides we may well say, It is a hard and difficult matter to keepe a meane in speaking of things, wherein scarsly can be had a certaine opinion of trueth. And the rather, for that the writers themselves have blamed each others of affectation & falshood, as in Fosephus we may see; who affirmeth, That Hellanicus dissented from Acustlaus, Acustlaus with Diodorus correcting Herodotus; Epherus accused Hellanicus of vntrueths; so did Timaus reprove Ephorus of as much; Philistus and Callias differed from Timaus in his History of Sicily, and Thucydides accounted a lyar by some. Casar is taxed by Asinius Pollio (laith Suetonius) to be partiall in his Commentaries; And Tacitus by Tertullian is blamed for vntruths; Fabius Maximus is reprehended by Polybius for defectively writing the Punicke warres; and himselse againe with Silenus, Timaus, Antigonus, & Hierom, as much found fault with by Dionysius Halicarnasseus, for writing the Romane histories so unperfedly. And a man may vie the very same speech against Dionysus, saith Bodine. These things thus standing, let vs give leave to Antiquitie, who sometimes mingleth falshoods with truth, to make the beginnings of Policies seeme more bonourable: And whose power is farre scrued into the worlds conceit, that with Hierome we may say, Antiquity is allowed with such generall applause, that knowne vntruthes many times are pleasing unto many. Yet with better regard to reverend Antiquity, whom fobs opposer wills vs inquire after, and to our owne relations in delivering their censures, let this be considered; That more things are let slippe, then are comprehended in any mans writings, and yet more therein written, then any mans life (though it be long) will admit him to reade. Neither let vs be forestalled with any prejudicate opinions of the reporters that in somethings may justly be suspected, or in affection, which by nature we owe to our naturall Conntrey; nor consent (as Liuie speaketh) to stand to the ancientnesse of reports, when it seemeth to take away the certainty of truth. To keepe a meane betwixt both, my felfe with Bildad doe confesse, that I am but of yesterday, and know nothing, and therefore wil relate the originall names and Nations of this famous fland, with the successions of her Monarches and Historicall attions, fo farreonly as is most approued by the best Writers, and will leaue other clouds of obscurity to be cleared by the labours of a more learned penne.

the yeere after the generall Flood two hundred fiftie and two, where he feated, and gaue Lawes to his people, and left to his postcritie the name thereof to bee called Samothea, after his owne. But fith the credit of this Samothes and his Samothea arifeth onely from a fmall and new pamphlet, bearing the name of Berofus the Chaldean, bolftred out vnder a flew of aged Antiquitie, and thrust into the world vnder the counternance of the ancient Historian himselfe : I meane not to enforce, seeing my purpose is to expose this most beautifull Iland in her owne beseeming attire, and not deformed by these rotten and patched ragges. And of this forged Berofus we have better cause to vpbraid I ohannes Annius his Countenancer and Commenter, then the Egyptian Priests had to twit Solon, in accusing the Grecians, that for historie had not attained to the yeeres of a gray head. For it exceeds not much one hundred and twenty yeeres fince the same booke first appeared in the world; and then vehemently suspected as fabulous by Lodouicus Vines, and afterwards conui-Gusperus Var- cted by the learned Gasperus Varrerius in a seuerall treatife, and now univerfally rejected of all skilfull

Gentiles, is brought by some Authors into this Iland,

(4) But the name ALBION is better received, being found to tearmed of the Grecians in ancient time, as in the booke De Mundo, written to Alexander, and supposed to be Aristotles, Pliny in his Natural Hiflorie, Ptolomie, Strabo, and others : yet vpon what ground it should bee so called there arise many coniectures. Pomponius Mela, Nicolas Perottus, Rigmanus Philefius, Ariftotle, and Humfrey Lhurd, derive it from Albion Mareoticus a Giant, and sonne of Neptune, that conquered (as they fay) these Samotheans, and seated himselfe in this Iland the yeere after the Flood three hundred thirty fine. And if that be true which Perottus and Lilius Giraldus have written, then may this Albion giue name to this Iland. Notwithstanding, Strabo, Munster, and Frier Bartholomew, will have it lo named ab albis rupibus, of the rockes and white clifts appearing towards the coasts of France: which carrieth the more likelihood through the credit of Orpheus a most ancient Poet, who in his Argenauticks (if so be they were his) calleth the Iland next vnto Hibernia or Hermin, which questionlesse is this of ours, were that is, the white Land. And accordingly have the Welfh Poets called it Inis Wen. And this is further confirmed from Cicero, who termeth these whitish clifts mirificas moles ; as also by the anticke Coines of Antonius Pius and Seuerus the Romane Emperours, wheren BRITAINE is flamped in a womans attire fitting vpon rocks. And the same being chalkie, or of a Fourth de morbis | plaster-like substance, Fracastorius supposeth was the cause of the sweating sicknesse, and whereof Albion had the name. Vnlesse some will derive it from Alphon, which as Festus faith, doth signific white in Greeke; or Olbion, rich or happie, in regard of the fertilitie of the foile, wholesome temperature of the aire, and the rich commodities in the same : either from Albion for the high fituation. But from the Latine albis rupibus it could not bee deriued, when that language was vnknowen to the world. Marianus the Monke, John Rous, David Pencair, and William Caxton, from others more ancient, doe fetch the name thereof from Albina the beautifull daughter of Dioclesian King of Syria, who with her fifters, thirty in number, for the flaughter of their husbands, were banished their Countrey, and without man, oares, or tackles, were committed to the mercy of the Seas, who after many aduentures. lastly arrived upon this shoare, where they inhabited, A ridiculous opt and gaue name to this Iland, calling it Albion after the name of their eldeft fifter : and accompanying with Divels, brought foorth a progenie of Giants, if we will beleeue the Legend of this most impudent lier, which is worthily rejected by Badius, Volateranus, Harding, Bale, Iohn Rous, and others. But that the name Albion was both of great acceptance and long continuance, is apparent by the worthy Epitheton of King Edgar the Saxon, who in his Charter for the foundation of the

Abbie of Ely, hath these words: Ego Edgarus Basileus | The mame Albie dilect a Infula Albionis, subditis nobis sceptris Scotorum, Cumbrorum, & omnium circumcirca Regionum, quieta pace fruens, &c. By which hee knitteth the whole Kings. Iland together, as a Land worthily to be beloued, and calleth it ALBION

(5) The next name ascribed vnto this Iland is BRITAINE BRITAINE, and that first found and given by the Grecians, who were the first discouerers of these Wes land by y name fterne parts of the world : either from their painted BRITAINE bodies, as their neighbours (if not ancestours) the Gaules were named of their long shaggie haire, or of their rich metals therein gotten, and thence carried in abundance into other Countries ; or from Brute, that with his dispersed Troians conquered it, as he of Monmouth hath translated; or what occasion socuer, uffing ap Aribur. I dispute not : only it feares me I shall give but small satisfaction to the desirous Reader, of the cause and originall of this name, being conforted with fo many vocertainties, wherein the further we follow this intangled threed, the further are we lead into the Labyrinth of ambiguitie. But as Plutareh, Liny, and other Latine Writers have complained of the many fictions The fainings of and fables of Poets intermingled with the histories of truth, Poets have be whereby truth it felfe was often made incredible; for weign rehearing many in the histories. fo we in rehearling the diuers names of Britannie, and the reasons thereof by sundry Writers alleged, rest free in our relations, either from impeaching the power of Antiquitie, or approouing those things that are as yet wrapped vp in Times Oblitions, leaving the credit to them that haue-left the same vnto vs, and the censure of their opinions to the judgement of the

learned, and those of better experience, (6) The vulgar received opinion, held on with foure hundred yeeres continuance, (some few mens of this lland exceptions had against the same) is, that this Iland thought to take tooke the name of Britannia from Brute the sonne of Brate. Syluius, of whom more shall bee spoken in the next Chapter for the peopling of this Iland, and from whom some (following a suspected Gildas) doe write the name Brutaine : for so doth Hierome, who translating Acthicus that excellent Scythian Philosopher, cal-leth both this and the Ilands adiacent, Infulas Brutamic.is. But belides the many objections made both by forraine and home-bred Writers, that sceme to make the storie of Brute doubtfull, Humfrey Lhuyda In his Beeniarie Cambre-Britaine, a learned and diligent searcher of Britaine. Antiquaties, doth confidently deny the name Britaine to be taken from Brute; and among many other obfernations, makes this an infallible argument, that the letter B. is not the fuft radicall of that name; and affirmeth boldly, that there is not any British word whose much boldly, that there is not any British word whose which is the best boundary to be sufficient first radicall letter is B. And therefore hee will have it to be anciently written PRYDCAIN, compounded of two British words, PRYD and CAIN, which PRYDCAL fignifie (as he faith) Beauty and White; the C. being lost in the latter word, for the more easie pronuntiation in the British tongue; and the P. in the former changed into B. by the Latines, for the more gentle and pleasant sounds sake: fo that himselfe thinketh, that those learned and expert men in the British tongue, which wrote the Ilands name with B. doe therein rather follow the Latines, then judging that to bee the true name indeed : for proofe whereof hee citeth both ancient Copies and Traditions of their owne old Poets the Bardi, by whom | Britaine viually (faith he) it was vivally called Prydain, as the fitteft called Prydain. denomination for so beautifull a Land. But if either colour or commodities were her Godfathers at the font-stone, why was she not rather named The Palace of Queene Ceres, as old orpheus termes her; either Infula florum, as it hath beene found written in a very ancient manu-script? And yet to second this his conceited name, I finde recorded by Bishop Cooper, a learned Writer, that which makes for that purpose. At Engehnreh (faith he) two miles from Salisburie, in the dig- Britannia write ging downe of a wall, a booke containing twenty leaves of Professes. very thicke velome was found, which from the hands of Master Richard Pace, chiefe Secretarie to the King, I re- King Edward Vt.

thorow yet did I well perceive the word PRYTANIA, (not called fo, from the adjuncts white and Beauteous but rather from the Greeke word unnula Prytania, which as he faith, doth fignifie mettals. For the Grecians flourishing in wisedome, and experience, entred the Ocean and finding this Iland full of Braffe, Tynne, Lead, Iron. Gold, and Silver gave name thereunto accordingly and called it Prytania. Thus farre he. And some in regard of these rich commodities thence brought, will haue it named Britannia, as voon like occasion Vibius Sequester astirmeth Calabria sometimes to haue beene so salled. Others, and those many, do hold a more strange opinion, namely, that this Iland was called Britannia of Bretta a Spanish word which fignifieth Earth, for Bretta a Spanish that it was separated from the maine land, and say they it was once joined with the continent of France, Of this opinion are Antonius Volfcus, Dominicus Marius Niger, Servius Honoratus Vinianus, Bodine, Twyne, and Verstegan. But how that name from that separation may be gathered I understand not : for if it be granted, that this Iland also was cut from the continent (as it is thought all others in the world were,) by the violent rage of the univerfall floud, yet it followeth not, that this only should claime that name, and from that occasion, more then any other, or then all of them so divided and set apart in the maine Ocean. Others there are that would have the name Britaine to bee brought from Britona a Nymph in Greece, daughter to Mars, who (as they lay) to avoid the lascivious intents of Minos, for looke the country, and passing the leas ariued in this Iland and by her the name arose, this hath Textor . But I might as well cite Calepine for his Anglia, and Marianus for his Albina, being all fables conforting alike together, and fictions of the same au-Hefychisu. thority that Virgils Dido is. Hefichius deriueth the name Britaine from Britannus the father of Celtice on whom Hercules begat Celtus the original of the Celta as Parthenius Nicesus a very ancient author writeth. taus. Sir Thomas Elia And Sir Thomas Eliot a learned Knight draweth the name of this Iland from the Greek fountaine alfo, Greek word but of other fignification, viz. rumania Prutania, by which terme the Athemans signified their publike reuenues, and yet that is infily excepted against, seeing that it is a peculiar terme only to the Athenians, and that Grecians call the Grecians called this Iland sureme not therente Goroand not pius Becanus in his Originall of Antwerp faith, that the Iporania. Pomponius Letus would have it Briton, and that name given it from the Britons in France. Indeed it is probable, that from the Celtes, the old Gaules, our originals descended: but that the name should come of them hath no colour of truth, feeing that those Britons came from vs, and not we from them : and in Cafars time that coast was called Armorica, but this of ours Britaine. Forcatulus deriueth the name thereof from Brithin a drinke, which as Athenaus faith was vied among the Greeks. And others will have it from the Bruti aroauing and stragling people in Italy : both which are accounted but idle conceits and for no leffe we will leave them. White of Basing Stocke will have the name thereof deriued from an Hebrew word, and Isidore from a word of her own language. Thus then is Britanny burthened with many titles under one truth; and these are the ascriptions, causes and exceptions, as far as we are able to gather :all which must give place to that which is to follow out of the painfull collections and iudicious observances of our illustruous Antiquarie Master Cambden . Whose words I will abridge, and by his good fauour bring to furnish this chapter, and further to satisfie the vusatisfied Reader.

And verely, that the Greeks arised in this our region, viewed and considered well the site and nature thereof, there will be no doubt nor question made : if we obferue what Athenœus hath written concerning Phileas Taurominites who was in Britaine in the yeere one hundred and fixty before Cæfars comming : if we call to remembrance the Altar with an inscription onto Vlysses in Greek letters creeted in Calcdonia as Solinus faith, and lastly if we marke what Pytheas before the time of the Romans here, hath delivered and written as touching the di-Stance of Thule from Britaine. For who had cuer discouered onto the Greeks, Britain, Thule, the Belgick countries, and their sea coasts especially, if the Greek ships had not entred the British and German Ocean, yea and related the description therof unto their Geographers? Had Pytheas, actifiption there y who their vergraphers: It as I yuttess, thinke you, come to the knowledge of fix daies failing beyond Britaine, unlesse some of the Greeks had showed the same? Who euer told them of Scandia, Bergos and Nerigon, out which men may faile into Thule? And these names seem to have been better knowen unto the most ancient Greeks, then either to Pliny or to any Roman. Wherupon Mela te-

T is not to bee doubted, but that this Iland with the Vniuerfall was replenished with people, immediately after that men began to be multiplied vpon the earth even in the daies of the former Patriarkes, and long before the Flood of Noah, as fundrie ancient

Writers haue related. And furely if wee confider in those first ages of the world the long life of man (the only meanes to multiplication) and the worlds continuance for one thousand six hundred sistie and six yeeres before it was destroied, wee shall easily yeeld, that every Country and corner of the earth was plentifully peopled and inhabited. And so much doe the Sacred Scriptures intimate vnto vs, where, by the Prophet Efay it is faid, Thus faith the Lord, that created heauen; God himfelfe, that framed the earth, and made it: he hath prepared it; he created it not in vaine; he formed it to (2) But when the wrath of GOD was executed

This Brute is brought from the ancient Troians by descent, yea and from the perfons of the heathen deified Gods: as that he was the fonne of Syluius, who was the fonne of Afcanius, the sonne of AEneas, the sonne of Anchifes by Venus the Goddesse, and daughter to Inpiter their greatest in account. And if Pliny and Varro hold it praise worthy to challenge descents (though falfly) from famous personages, wherby, as they say, appeareth an inclination to vertue, and a valorous conceit to persivade vnto honor, as sprung from a race diuine and power-full: then by all meanes let vs listen to him of Monmouth, who hath brought his Nation to ranke in degree with the rest of the Gentiles, which claime themlelues to be the Generation of the Gods. (12) But why do I attribute the worke to him, as the Author, fith he professeth himselfe to be but the translator of that history out of the British tongue, which Walter the Archdescon of Oxford brought out of Normandie, and delivered vnto him? For the further confirmation thereof, and more credit to his flory, Henry of Huntington, who lived in the time of king Henry of Hun-Stephen, and wrote likewise the history of this land, bringeth the line of Brute from AEneas the Troiane, and his arrivage and conquest to happen in the time of Helihis Priesthood in the land of I frael, as Geffrey ap Arthur hath also done: not taking (as some thinke) any thing thereof from him, but rather out of an ancient booke intituled De Origine Regum Britanno rum, found by himselfe in the library of the Abbey of A hooke hereo Bee, as he trauelled towards Rome: which history began at the arrivall of Brute, and ended with the acts of Cadwalader, as by a treatise of his owne inditing, bearing the same title, hath been compared, and found in all things agreeing with our vulgar history, as industrious Lamberd affirmeth himselfe to have seen. And Ninius is faid by the writer of the reformed history, to bring these Britaines from the race of the Trojans, foure hundred yeeres before that Geffrey wrote: yea and long before Ninius also, Taliesina Briton Poet in an Ode called Hanes, of Taieff his course of hife, in these words, Mia depthymyma at Wedillion Trois, that is, I came hither to the Remnants of Troy.

(13) That William of Malmesbury (who wrote in

Mommouth is most certaine; yet doth he make menti-on of arthur a Prince (saith he) deserving rather to be advanced by the truth of records, then abused by fulse imputation of fables; being the only prop and upholder of his country. And Beda, his ancient also, nameth Ambrofius Aurelianus to be King of the Britaines, long before that Geffrey was borne : So was Brennus mentioned by Liny; Bellinus, (if he be Belgius) by Instine; Cassibe lan by Cafar; Cunobilin by Suetonius; Arniragus by Martial; Lucius by Eusebius; Coel, Constantius, Carau fius, and others by Eutropius, and Paulus Diaconus; and Helena by Nicephorus, Ambrofc, and Socrates. Thefe are the affirmatives that give countenance to the Archdeacon of Monmouths translation, and credit to Brutes conquests and successions; yea and Iohn Harding his Herauld, in his home-spun poetry, can easily emblaze his armes to be Gules, charged with two lions rampan. endorsed ore; and the same to be borne by the Kings of Troy. And his banner displaied at his entrance i faid to be Vert a Diana of gold fitchel, crowned, and in thronized, the same that AEneas bare, when he entred the land of the Latines. But the censures of these relations I leave to the best liking of judicious Readers, only wishing them to be valike the inhabitants under the rockes of the Cataracts of Nilus, whereof Cicere and Ammianus make mention, who were made deafe by the continual noise of the fall of Nilus : left by the found and loud voices of these writers, the exceptions of others can not be heard, which from the fulnesse of their pennes I will likewise declare, without offence,I hope, vnto any.

(14) First (with a reucrend reservation had to the facred histories) Varrothe most learned Latine writer, Varo. diuiding times motions into three feuerall parts, that is, from the creation to the flood, which he termeth altogether vncertaine : from the flood to the first olympiad by Beroaldus computation fet in the yeere of the Times motion world 3 1 5 4 and thirty one of the raigne of Ioss, king of Iudah : seuch hundred seuenty and source yeers before the birth of our Sauionr) he calleth fabuous : and the last age from the first Olympiad to him. The third only felfe he nameth historicall. Now the story of Brute beginning two hundred fixty feuen yeeres before the Theflory of first Olympiad, falleth in the time wherein nothing els is related, either of the Greeks or Latines, the only learned writers, but fables and tales, as both himfelfe and others have told vs, much more then, among the barbarous, valettred, and vacinill nations as all these parts of the world then were. (15) Whereupon Gildas our ancientest home-

borne writer, (cited and in whole fentences followed by venerable Beda, who termeth him the Britaines his floriographer) in this of Brute is filent, and in his lamentable pallions neuer dreames of him, but as one ouerwhelmed with griefe bewaileth the wickednesse of the time wherein he liued, who was born, as himfelfe faith, in the forty fourth yeere after the Saxons first entrance, about the yeere of Christs incarnation 493. and died, as Bale citeth out of Polydore, the yeere of our redemption 5 8 o. Ninius also another ancient writer, who lined aboue eight hundred yeeres fince, taking in hand the Chronicles of the Britaines, complaineth that their great Mafters and doctors could give him no affiftance, being ignorant of skill, and had left no memoriall of things paffed, nor committed their acts vnto writing, whereby hee was inforced to gather what he had gotten from the annals and Chronicles of the holy fathers. Beda likewise, whose history ended in anno 733, beginneth no fooner then with Iulius Cafarsentrance; notwithstanding he had the assistance of the Abbat Albinus, who was brought vp vnder Theodorus Archbishop of Canterbury, and had begun the history of this land with most diligent search from below the Ab the records of the kingdome of Kent, and the prouinces adioining; as also being further assisted by Daniel Bishop of the West-Saxons, who sent him all the records that were to be found of the same Bishoprick, South-Saxons, and the ile of Wight. The like helpes had he from Abbat Esius, for the country of East-Angles; from Cymbertus and the brethren of Lastinge for the prouince of Mercia, and East-Saxons. And from the brethren of Lindufarnum, for the country of Norchumberland; besides his owne paines in collections, knowledge and experience; all which he did difget that history of Brute nor his successors, which as some would haue it, was then unbegotten in the world. (16) After him Elward, as William of Malmsburie calleth him,or rather (as he writeth himselfe) Patricius Conful fabius Queflor Ethelwerdus, a diligent scarcher of antiquities, a reuerend person, and of the blood roiall, wrote foure bookes, briefly comprising the whole history of England, from the beginning of the world vnto the time of king Edgar wherein he liued; of Brute nor his Britaines speaketh a word; but passeth with silence to the Romans and Saxons. What need I to cite Ingulphus, who died anno I 1 09. Flo-rentius of Worcester, that florished in the daies of King Henry the first, or William of Malmsbury, that wrote vnto the end of his raigne; all of them writers before Geffrey of Monmouth, but none of them mentioning this flory of Brute. This moued William of Newbourgh borne (as himfelfe faith) in the beginning of King Stephens raign, & living at one and the same time with this Archdeacon of Monmouth, too too bitterly to inueigh against him and his history, euen so soone as the fame came foorth: as in the proeme of his booke is to

Mi taines History, how shamelessy, and with a bold counte-nance he doth lie, there is no man that readeth therein can doubt, unlesse he hath no knowledge at all in ancient true histories; for having not learned the truth of things indeed, he admitteth without discretion and judgement the manitie and untruths of fables . I forbeare to fpeake (faith he) what great matters this fellow hath forged of the Britaines acts before the Empire and comming in of Casar. Thus farre

But I know the answer to this so great an accusation: A deutee to put by this William of Newburghs namely, that this William making fuit vnto David ap Owen Gwyneth, Prince of North-wales, for the Bishoprick of Saint Assays, after the death of Geffrey, and thereof failing, fallly scandalized and impudently belied that most reuerend man. Which surely had been a great fault, and might of vs be beleeved, had not others of the same ranke and time, verified asmuch (17) For Syluefter Giraldus, commonly called Cam-brenfis, that flourished in the same time with the said Deferips.Camb. cep 7. He florished in author, made no doubt to terme it The fabulous story of Geffrey. The like is verified by John Weathamstead. Ab-Giraldus Com bat of Saint Albanes, a most judicious man that wrote brenis calleth Brutshiftory the in anno 1440, who in his Granarie giueth sentence of this history as followeth. The whole discourse of Brutus (faith he) is rather poeticall, then historicall, and for divers reasons is built more upon opinion then truth, first because there is no mention thereof made in the Romane occusive neere is no menium increof made in the Komane flory, either of his killing his father, or of the kild birth, or yet of bunifing the some. Secondly, for that Ascanius begat no such some who had for his proper name Syluius by any approued Author: for according to them, he begat Brucus difpro-ued by John Westbamfred, only one sonne, and his name was Iulius, from whom the only one some some name was unus, grom wown ine family of the Iulii tooke their beginning. And thirdly, Syl-uius Posthumus, whom perhaps Cestivey meaneth; was the some of Acneas by his wife Lauinia, and he begetting his sonne Acneas in the thirty eighth yeer of his raigne, en-ded his life by course of naturall death. The kingdome therfore now called England, was not heretofore, as many will haue, named Britaine of Brutus the sonne of Syluius. Wherefore it is a vaine opinion and ridiculous to challenge tking to viurpe noble blood, and yet to want a probable ground of the chal-lenge: for it is manhood only, that enobleth a nation; and it is the mind also with perfect understanding, and nothing els, that gaineth gentility to a man. And therefore Seneca writeth in his Epistles to Plato ; that there is no King but Senesa Epift.44. tecame from vassals, and no vassall but he came from Kings.Wherefore to conclude, let this suffice (saith he) that the Britaines from the beginning of their nobility have been couragious and valiant in fight, that they have subdued their enemies on every side, and that they otterly refuse the yoke of servitude.

(18) Now that William of Newborough, had sufficient cause(say some)to exclaime against the fantacies of Merline, and the fictions of Arthur, is made manifelt in the sequel, not only by the decree of that obtruded Councell of Trent, wherein was inhibited the publication of Merlines books; but also (in effect) by the flatute enacted the fifth yeere of our last deceafed Queene Elizabeth of bleffed and immortall memorie, wherein is forbidden such fantasticall predictions, vpon occasions of Armes, Fields, Beasts, Badges, Cognizances, or Signets, fuch as Merline flood most vpon; and likewise William of Malmsbury faith that Arthur being the only proppe that vpheld his country, de-ferued rather to be advanced by truth, then abused with fables wherewith that story is most plentifully stored. And also, that Weathamstead had reason to account Brutes acts and conquests, to be rather poeticall then any waies warranted by the records of truth, appeareth by the filence of the Romane writers therein, who name neither Brute nor his father in the genealogie of the Latine Kings: and if any fuch were, (faith the contradictors) how could they be ignorant of nealogic of the the vntimely death of their king, slaine by the hand of his naturall (though in this act vnnaturall) sonne? or what should moue them, being so lauish in their own commendations, to be thus silent in their Brutes worthinesse, that with seuen thousand dispersed Troians warred to victorioully in Gallia, conquered a kingdome of Giants; Subdued a most famous Iland, raigned gloriously, and left the same to his posterity; none of them, either in profe or poetry once handled, but left to destiny to be preserved by a long ensuing meanes, or to perish in oblinion for euer? And surely this moued the whole senate of great Clerks to give sentence, that neuer any fuch Brute raigned in the world; fuch as were Boccace Y ines, Hadrian Innius, Polydore, Bucha-man Y ignier, Genebrard, Molinaus, Bodine, and others.

Yea, and there are some Criticks that faine would take aduantage from the defenders of Brutes The Criticks history themselues, as from Sir Iohn Prys, that produceth many vncertaine ensamples of the originall of other nations; which granted, (fay they) doth no waies confirme the truth or certainty of our owne; neither is it any honour to derive these Britaines from the No honor to the fcumme of fuch conquered people as the Troians Britans to be de-were. Humfrey Lhuyd likewise denying absolutely the Troung derivation of the Britaines name from Brute , and bringing it from two compounded words, (as we haue faid) doth thereby weaken the credit of his conquest of this Iland to their vnderstanding, as also the catalogue of his fucceffors, which are faid to raigne nedby them-fucceffinely for many hundred of yeeres after him. And another industrious British writer, having the helpe of two most ancient British copies, the collections of Caradock of Carnaruan, their owne Bardies euery third-yeeres vilitation, and twenty feuen authors of Wales but a of good account, (all of them cited in the preface of his Chronicle) besides his helps had in the offices of records for this realme; yet ascending no higher then to the person of Cadwallader, Prince of Wales, whose raign was in the yeere of Christs incarnation 6 8 2 and no leffe then one thousand seuen hundred twenty and fixe yeeres, after that Brute is faid to come into this Iland, doth not warrant (fay they) the ftory that is included betwirt but rather even the same is enterlaced Cadwallers flor with many doubtfull vncertainties, and so left difputable by the faid compiler himselfe; as namely whether that this Cadwallader whom the Britaines claime to be their king, be not the same Chedwald whom the Saxons would have theirs; both living at one time, both in acts alike, and names necre, both abandoning their kingdomes, both taking the habit of religion, both dying in Rome, both buried in one Church, nay, fay they, in one Sepulchre. The like he bringeth of the Britaines Iuor, and the Saxons Iue, in the like coherences of names, alts, denotions, and deaths : fo that this history of Brute carieth not fo fmooth a current for paffage as is wisked, nor is that Gordeons knot so easily vnloosed.

Againe, the Reformer of the British history himselfe, although he hath written one whole chapter in defence of Geffrey Monmouth, and straineth to make his booke authenticall, complaining often and accusing learned and unpartial Cambden feuerall times, for blowing away fixty of the Britaine Kings with one blaft: yet actied by the when he compareth the generations with the time, is forced thus to write : From Porrex to Mynogen are mount twenti one Kings in a lineall descent, and but yeers ninety two one duide 92 by 21 and you hall find, that childrenbeget children, and these (saith he) by George Owen Harry in his book of pedegrees dedicated to his Maiesty appeareth to be in a lineall descent, besides three or foure collaterals. And yet goeth further: Though the Scripture (faith hee) allege Iudah, Hezron, Salomon, and Ezekiah, to be but young when they begat their sonnes, which (as Rabbi Isack saith) might be at thirteene yeeres When (as Nadol lauck fairs) might be a similetine years of age: And although Saint Augultine fay, that the strength of youth migh begic thildren young; and Hierome bringeth instance of a boy that at tenyeers of age begot a childe: yet this doll not helpe to excuse the mistaking of secres for the British Kings about mentioned.

Thus far Iohn Lewis: and for the exceptions made against Brute: wherin I have altogether vsed the words of others; and will now (without offense, I hope) adde a supposall of mine owne, seeing I am fallen into the computation of times, which is the onely touch-flone to the truth of histories, especially such as are limited by the bounds of the facred Scriptures, as this for Brutes entrance is. And that the fame cannot bee fo ancient (supposing it were neuer so certaine) as the vulgar opinion hitherto hath held, the circumstance of time, to my feeming, fufficiently doth prooue, (20) For Brutes conquest and entrance are brought fore the birth of our bleffed Sautour 1059, yeeres. Brute then liuing in this forelaid time, was foure descents from the conquered Troians, (as he of Monmouth hath laid downe) which were Aneas, Ascanius, Syluius.

and himselfe: so that by these generations successive in order, the very yeere almost of Trops destruction may certainly be pointed out and knowen: which in fearching hath beene found to doubtful, that by some it hath beene thought to be a meere fable. Yet with more reuerence to antiquitie observed, let vs cast and compare the continuance of these foure generations

vnto Brutes Conquest, not shortning them with Baruch, to be but ten yeeres to an age; neither length-ning them with Iosephus, who accounteth one hundred and seventy yeeres for a generation : but with more indifferencie let vs with Herodotus, who wrote neerer these times, allow thirty yeeres for a succes-fion, as hee accounteth in his fecond booke. Now

foure times thirty make one hundred and twenty, the number of yeeres that these foure Princes successively

did line: by which computation likewise measured by Scripture, the ruination of Troy fell in the thirtie eighth yeere of Gideons gouernment in I frael, and was the yeere after the worlds creation 2763. But the authoritie of Clemens Alexandrinus, alleged out of Menander, Pergamenus, and Letus, destroicth that time of Troies destruction, and placeth it fully two hundred and thirtie yeeres after, euen in the raigne of King Salomon: for in his first booke Stromaton thus hing occurrent that the our throw of Troy came into Phenicia, at that time when Hiram King of Trous gaue his daughter in mariage onto Salomon King of tirele. Where, by him we lee, that Troies ruines and Salomon King of the characteristics of the characteristics of the characteristics and Salomon King of the characteristics and the c monsraigne fell both vpon one time. And fo Brute

Smear raigneten both vpon one time. And to Brine hath loft of his antiquity, by this account, 230, yeeres; and entred not in Helies Priethood, but rather in the viurpation of Iudalis Kingdome by Athalia, and in

(22) And yet to make a deeper breach into Brutes storie, and to set the time, in a point so vncertaine, as from which neither circle for line can be trulie drawen ; Manethon the Historian Priest of Egypt, in his fecond book cited by left-phus, affirmed hard the flyedistic departure from Egypt was almost a though a special property for method for the flyedistic departure from Egypt was almost a though a special flyedistic departure from Egypt was almost a though a special flyedistic departure from Egypt was almost a though a special flyedistic departure from the flyedistic fly twenty yeeres more added, for the foure descents aboue mentioned, the number, will fall about the yeere of the worlds creation 3630, long after the death of Alexander the Great, and Greeke Monarch. By which account the great supposed antiquity of Brute, is now leffened by feuen hundred fiftie and two yeeres; and the time so scantelized betweet his and Cefars entrance, that two hundred forty fix yeeres onely remaine : a time by much too short for seventy two Princes, which successively are said to raigne each after others, and from Brate to Cefar recorded to have waied the regall Scepter of this I land.

(23) Burvnto these objections I know the anfwer will be ready; namely, the diuerfities of Scrip-tures account, being so fundrie and different, that the ftorie of Brute cannot thereby bee touched, but still flandeth firme vpon it selfe. Indeed I must confesse, that from the first Creation, to the yeere of mans Re-demption, the learned Hebrewes, Greekes, and Latines, differ much, and that not only each from others, but euen among themselues so farre, that there can be no indifferent reconciliation made, as by these seuerall computations may be seene, as followeth:

Baal Seder-Holem= 3518. Talmundistes-3784. New Rabbins -3760. Hebrewes: Rabbi Nahsson-3740. Rabbi Leui ---3786. And yet doe these disagreements helpe little the Objectors if this be considered, that the maine foundation of these diversities consisteth chiefly in the first world before the Flood, wherein it is manifest, that pris worsa Deture the Floor, wherein his manifest, mar the reputed Septingins added to the Hebrew Original five hundred eighty and fix yeeres. And from the Floor to Abrahams birth, is accounted two hundred to the Hood to Abrahams birth, is accounted two hundreds. dred and fine yeeres more then Moles hath. As likewife the like is done in the latter times : for from the Captuatie of Babylon to the death of Christ, one hun-dred thirty and leven yeeres are added, more then the Sunnes course hath measured : so that it seemeth the differences were not great for the times of Heli, Salomon, nor Iudahs Kings, in whose raignes Brute is brought to people and possessethis tiand. The like is thence observed for foure hundred twentic and seven yeeres, that is, to the seventie fifth of Abrahams life, wherein God began to tie the times accounts in holier fummes : for Terah, the first recorded Idolater, was the last in honour that had the Sunner course measured by mans life. And now the bounds of time tie the Promife to Abraham, to bee before the Law foure hundred and thirty yeeres, as the Apoftle to the Galashians affirmeth. From the Law to the building of Salomons Temple, and that in the fourth yeere Selemons Temple, of his raigne, were yeeres foure hundred and eightie: and from that foundation, to his death, were thirtie fix yeeres: for his whole raigne was fortie. From his death and Kingdomes division, vnto the burning of that Temple, which was executed in the nineteenth of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babel, were yeeres three hundred and ninetie, as by the daies of Exekiels fiege and fleepe appeareth in the fecond and fifth verses of his fourth Chapter. From the burning of the Temple, to the end of Iudahs captuitie, were yeeres fiftie and one, for the whole time of Babels bondage contained

But that the Romans themfelues descended from the Troians, or AEneas should be the roote of the Iulian family, how soener the fictions of Pocts as a fpring tide have flowed from the fulnesse of their pennes, yet Tacitus their best writer Trianis afable accounterh those things not far vnlike to old fables, Tecinomiana wherein he judgeth that Nero to win credit before the Consuls, and to get reputation in the glory of cloquence vndertooke the pleading of the Ilienses cause, declaring the Romanes descent from Troy: and the deciaring the Assumers detected from 1 reg . and the Islig from the loines of Assumer, which notwithfanding he cenfureth as is said. Auing thus farre spoken of the ancient Names of this famous Iland, and of the Nations acknowledged to bee the first Planters and Poffeffors thereof; it remaineth that fomewhat be mentioned of the Manners and Customes of those not so pleasing or acceptable as were to be wished, for that the clouds of ignorance and barbarous inciuilitie did then shadow and ouer-spread almost all the Nati-ons of the earth: wherein I desire to lay imputation no further then is sufficiently warranted by most au-tenticke Writers: and first from Cefar, who formost of all the Romanes discouered and described our ancient Rritaines

ueth a doubt. They died their bodies (faith he) with woad; but whether to make a gallant shew, or for what other cause else is vnccrtaine. And yet Herodian herein absolutely determineth, where hee saith, that the Britaines knew no vie of garments at all, but about their wastes and neckes wore chaines of iron, suppofing them a goodly ornament, and a proofe of their wealth; and their bare bodies they marked with fundry pictures reprefenting all manner of liuing creatures; and therefore they would not be clad, for hi-ding the gay paintings of their bodies. To which painting Pliny also agreeth; and describeth that hearbe they would they the gay pain-tings of their bodies, woad, to bee like to the Plantine in Gallia, naming it Glastum, with the inice whereof (saith he) the women of Britaine, as well wives as yoong women, anoint and die their bodiesall ouer, resembling by that tincture the colour of the Athiopians, in which manner they vie at solemne fealts and sacrifices to goe all naked. And Dio Nicaus out of the epitome of Xiphilinus, faith, that the custome of that Nation was, to abide glish word glaile, in tents all naked and vnshod. Notwithstanding, Cefar doth elsewhere report, that they clad themselves in leather, which perchance is meant of the civiller fort of them, and in time of battle. Solinus likewile speaking of the Britaines, saith, their Country is peopled partly with Barbarians, who by meanes of artificiall incisions of fundry formes, have from their childhood divers shapes of beasts incorporate vpon them; and having their markes deepely imprinted within their bodies, looke how their growth for stature, so doe these pictured characters likewise increase. Neither do these sauage Nations repute any thing a greater testimonie of their patience, then by such durable skarres to cause their limmes drinke in much painting and colour. These skarres by Tertullian are tearmed Britannorum sligmata, The Britaines markes. And vnto this skie-colour, or blewish dyings, it scemeth Mar-

das, carrying a sterne and grim countenance, after the 1 wonted heathenish manner : here fee we (faith he) vpon these desert walles, the vely features of the Britains Idols, meerly diabolicall, and in number almost exceeding those of Egypt. So by Tacitus they are noted with the common custome of the Gentiles, which was that they fought for the direction of their Gods by the looking into the entralls of Beafts, yea and of men too; and that they honored the Altars of their Gods with the facrifice and blood of fuch as they tooke captine in wars. And Plinie writing of Magick, Saith, that in his daies the art thereof in Britaine was highly honored, and all the people thereunto so much denoted, year and with all fuch complements of ceremonies in the same to be performed, that a man would thinke the Persians had learned all their Magick skill from them. Priests and instructors had they, whereof the chiefe were called Druides, whose office was imploied about noly things, faith Cafar; for they had the managing of publike and private facrifices, and to interpret and discusse matters of religion. Vinto them doe resort great numbers of yong men to learne at their hands. and they be had in great reuerence. For they determine almost all controucrsies, and matters in variance, as well publike as private. And if there happen any thing to be done amiffe, if there be any murther committed, if there rife any controuerfie concerning inheritance or bounds of lands, they take the matter into their power, and award either recompence or penalties in the case. And if there be any, be he private person, or be it corporation, that will not stand to their judgement, they interdict him, which punishment among them is held most gricuous. They that are so excommunicated are accounted in the number of the wicked and vngratious : all men thun them, all men eschue their company and communication, lest by conversing with them, they should defile them-sclues and receive harme. If they demand law, they may not haue it : neither may they enioy any place of honor. Ouerall these Druides there is one Primate, which hath chiefe authority ouer them. When he is dead if there be any of the reft that excelleth in wor. thinesse, he succeedeth: or if there be any equall, he is chosen by voices of the rest, and diners times they ftriue for the foueraignty by force of armes. These men at a certaine season of the yeere, in the borders of the Carantes (whose country is counted the middle of all Gallia) do fit together in a place hallowed, whereunto refort from all fides all fuch as haue any controuerlies : and looke what is decreed and judged by them, that they fland vnto. This order of discipline is thought to have had beginning in Britaine, and from thence to have been brought into Gallia. And at this day, they that are defirous to attaine this skill more exactly, do commonly repaire thither to learne it. These Druides customably are exempted from the wars, neither do they pay taxes and tallages with other folke: for they are priviledged as from the warres, so from all other burthens. Allured with fo great rewards, many euen of their owne accord, do register themselves in that order, and divers are sent thirher by their parents and kinsfolke. Where they are reported to learne a great number of verses by heart. Whereof it commeth to passe, that divers continue twenty yeeres in learning. Neither do they thinke it lawfull to put them in writing, whereas in all other things, for their accounts, as well publike as private, they vie the Greek letters,

This order they seems (in mine opinion) saith he, to haue taken for two confiderations : partly because they will not haue their discipline published among the common people; and partly because they will not that they which shall learne, trusting too much to their bookes, should have the lesse regard of remembrance : in that it hapneth well neere to most men, that vpon trust of the helpe of their booke, they are flacker in learning things by heart, and leffe care to beare them in mind. This is one of the chiefest things that they labour most to beat into mens minds, that the Soules die not, but do after death paffe from one | paffeth from one to another; and hereby they thinke men should be most stirred vnto virtue, when the feare of death is nothing regarded. Also they dispute many other things: as of the starres, and of their mouings: of the bignesse of the world, and the earth: of the nature of Philosophic. things: of the strength and power of the goddes immortall : and do therein instruct the youth . Vnto these Druides and their doctrine had Lucan the Poet relation in his first booke towards the end, where he writeth thus of them.

fo were their meanes either for exportation or importation very flender in those times ; I meane their hipping. It is true, that some arc of opinion, that Ships were first invented in these our Seas : but that this should be true, I have cause to doubt, that Art being long before inspired by God himselfe into the heart of Noah for making the Arke, and no doubt practifed by that paterne of many others. But that the ancient Britaines had ships of reasonable vie, though of simple Art, Cefar testifieth, faying, that the kecles and ribs of their ships were of light wood, and coursed ouer with leather : which kinde the now-Britaines call Corraghs: and with them (laith Polyhistor) they did faile betwikt Britannie and Ireland, (which sea for roughnesse and danger may bee compared with any other what (ocuer) though the bulke of their vessels were but of some flexible wood, couered with the hides of Buffiles: and as long as they were failing, so long did they abit aine from meat: whereby it seemeth they neuer sailed any great iourneys. And of this their shipping Pliny also speaketh, and Lucan fingeth, thus:

Primim cana salix, madefacto vimine, paruam T exitur in puppim, casog, induta iuuenco, V eltoris patiens tumidum super emicat amnem : Sic V enetus stagnante Pado, fusog Britannus, Nauigat Oceano, -

(12) And their trafficke amongst themselues was not of much worth, in that, as Cefar faith, the Coines which they had were either of braffe, or else iron rings sized at a certaine waight, which they wsed for their monies. Of which kind some have averred they have seene found and lately taken up in little cruses or pitchers of earth quent, they shortly after stamped both filuer and gold;

and thereon the faces of their Kings, even in the daies of Iulius Cafar, who was the first that had his owne

Many of these are a | Knogs image mongst vs remaining, whereof I have inserted some | werein Cusar image imag few, as in their due places shall follow, which I receiued from the liberall hand of that most learned Knight, and worthy storer of Antiquities Sir Robert Cotten of Cunington. These Cornes are commonly imboffed outward and shield-like, whereon the inscription, or fare, is feen; the reuerse hollow, and therein coynes from their deuife fet : and by these formes are they known forrame. to be the Britaines, no other nation stamping the like, except fome few among the Grecians, (13 We come laftly to speake of the manner of Of their their warfare, which Cafar thus describeth. First (faith he) they ride round about all parts of the battell, cafting off their darts: and often times with the terrible noise of their horses, and the ratling of their chariot They amage the wheeles, they amaze the enemy and breake their array. And when they have wound themselves in a- chartot whetler mong the troopes of horsemen, they leape foorth of their waggons, and fight on foot. In the meane while the waggoners withdraw themselues somewhat out of the battell, and fet their waggons in fuch order, that if they be ouercharged by the enemy, they may haue speedy and casie recourse vnto them. By meanes whereof they are both as ready to remoue as the horsemen, and as stedfast to stand in the battell as the footmen, and supply both duties in one. And they are come to fuch perfectnesse by daily practice and exercile, that even in steepe and falling places they will ftop their horses running a full gallop, and guide and turne them in a short roome, & run vpon the vergies and stand stedfastly vpon the beames, and quickly recouer themselues back againe into the waggons.

These would often give ground to egge their ene-mies from their maine battell, and then would leape out of their chariots and fight on foot. And they kept also such an order in fighting on horseback, that whether the enemies chased, or were chased, they were alwaies in danger. For they neuer fought in great companies together, but scatteringly a great way difrant the one from the other, and had stals lying in diuers places one to supply another, having over fresh and lufty men in the roomes of them that were weary. Of this their manner of fight in chariots, Strabe alfo declareth; and Diodorus Siculus faith that the Britaines lived after the manner of the first age of the world, vling chariots in their fight, as the report goes of the ancient Greeks at the Troian warres. Pomponius Mela also describing these Britaines, affirmeth that their fight was not only with horsemen and sootmen, but also with waggons and chariots, harnessed, and armed at the ends of the axle-trees with hookes and fithes, after the manner of the Gaules; but with apparance of greater courage, as Tacitus faith; as being not yet mollified by long peace. CHAPTER V.

The British go

EE come, at length, to speake of the government and politicall estate of the Britaines, which doubtleffe (the times then confidered) was as honorable in their rulers, and as manageable in the fubiects, as any other nations in these West parts of the world : their temperance, religion, learning, and noble resolution shewing no lesse. But in this point I must craue pardon of our British Heraulds, and some learned Antiquaries, if I bring not a lineall fuccession from Brute, and a monarchicall government in those times of obscurity, through whose mists no Egles eies could pierce, before the daies of Geffrey ap Arthur, as before was touched. And therefore following his counfell, who is best able in these things to give direction; I will begin the fuccession of Great Britains Monarchs, at the entrance and person of Iulius Casar; at which time, it seemeth, by him and other Latine writers (the best Recorders of kingdoms affaires,) this Iland was gouerned rather after the manner of an Ariflocratie, that is, by certaine great Nobles and Potent men, then under the command of any One as an absolute Monarch : though herein is a difference, in that in the Artificeratical regiment, the rulers are all Peeres of one Common wealth; whereas here,

This was the cause, as Tacitus tells vs, which brought that puissant nation into bondage: and was the only helpe to the Romans victories: for seldome it chanced (laith he) that two or three states met in counsell, and concurred in opinion to repulse the common danger; so that whilit they resisted and fought one by one, all at length were subdued. But this was not at once performed by Iulius Cafar the first Roman enterer, who (as he saith) rather (hewed the place to posterities, then gaue them the possession thereof, supposing it his glory sufficient, to have done what he did. For vnto the daics of Domitian, they held play with the Romans, and that with fuch valour, that the fubduing of some small part of this Hand was accounted by themselues to match the conquests of other mightier countries, and more notes of honour shewed in their publike triumphs for one Britaines milfortune, then viually was folemnized for whole kingdomes fubdued.

(4) That fuch people poffeffed, and that many Kings together raigned here in Britaine, Pomponius Mela doth show : Britaine (faith he) bringeth foorth Nations, and Kines of nations, though they be all without civility and barbarous. And Cafars intendments being known vnto them, it is faid that many of their Cities fent him by their Embassadors profers of submission: whereby appeareth their dinerlities of States, whereof only two held promife, and the rest failing was the occasion of his second expedition for Britaine. And Tacitm America, speaking of the shipwrack suffered by the Rollings. mass in the rigne of Tiberius, faith, that many of their fouldiers then diffressed and torne, being cast open the coasts of Britaine, were by the people curteously releveed, and by their petty Kings sent backe onto Germanicus their Generallinto Germanie; which Princes or petty Kings, were drawn (as else where he faith) by emulation into many partialities and factions; which was indeed their owne destruction. And that he was King of the Atrebatif in Britaine, may be ftrengthned by that which Cafar in his fecond book of Commentaries affirmeth, where, by his owne knowledge he faith, that one Divitiacus raigned ouer a great part of Gallia, and some portion of Britaine also: and so likewise this Comius is reported to be of great respect among our Britaines, and able in that country to doe much. (15) Galgaeus, a worthy and most valiant prince of the Caledonians, for vertue, and birth, preferred before any other in the Northern parts of this Iland, and made their Generall against the invasions of Juli-us Agricola, was the last Britaine, that against the Romans flood out: accounting those only happy, which were free from the contagion of that Roman tyranny, and themselves the flower of all the British nobility. that yet had not subjected their necks to their yoke The refistance which he made was great and warlike. but against the decree of God no man can stand; for the Romans, risen to their greatnesse, bare downe all that withstood them; and in a bloody battaile subdued him, and his forces, making all filent before them where they came, and leaving defolation in the places where they had been. Thus then was the whole Iland Subjected to the Roman Emperors, about one hundred thirty and fix yeeres after C.sfars first entrance, and the land that had been ruled by many petty kings, was brought now (as most parts of the world belides were) vnder the gouernment of one absolute Monarch Grienous, no doubt, was the losse of their liberties, but a greater gaine was gotten not many yeeres after; for from the rude and fauage manners of the barbarous, they were reclaimed, and became most civill. And he that had given their Iland to his Christ, prepared their hearts to receive him their King; vnto whose subjection also they were motiues to the Romans themselues. Two ancient British Coynes stamped in siluer we have here set downe, attributing them both to this Galgacus of Caledonia. Notwithstanding in these (as in the rest) I must fubmit my felfe to the more experienced, and the cenfures of these ancient things to the learned and more

(16) These then were the resisters of the Romans proceedings, that rather yeelded their brefts to the fword, then their necks to the voke of a forrein fubiection, and made their affaulters more famous in their conquefts, and themselves more renowned to following posterities:neither in these relations haue we followed the records of our owne, but the approued testimony of their best writers, who have delitiered what we have faid, and no doubt felt the like repugnancy of many others, both in the South and North of this Iland, though their names died with their valiant refiftance. And as these Britains held the Romans at eucn hand the space of one hundred thirty and fix yeeres, neither yet then were fubdued without themselves, that ever sided with the enemy against themselues, and whose factions made way for the feet of their conquerors, as from Tacitus we have declared: So their fucceffors the Saxons found as warlike withstanders, till God for Britains finnes had cast downe their strength, whereof more shall follow (Christ assisting) in the due place of their flories, that from the rangue of Vortigerne the Scourge of his country to Cadwallader the last prince of the Britains, spent their lives in the quarrell of liberty, and hath left their memorials famous for their countries defence.

(17) But the state of kingdomes (how largely so euer extended, or by what humane wifedome ftrengthned with defence) do find their periods not to exceed much the number of fix hundred yeeres, as by common experience among most nations is feene. In these times therefore when the world was shaken with wars, first by the Romans that strone to mount hie the spires of their intended glory, and were by Gods deeree appointed to ouerrun and afflict the earth, when Kings of people(I say) were en-forced to lay the Crownes from their heads at their conquering feet; and free nations loaded with the yokes of their bondage : then was fulfilled the refo-Numb.24.23. lution of this question demanded, Alas who shall line when God doth this? And then among the rest, Britaine gaue place to necessity with as manlike resistance as did states more stronger, or kingdomes confined with far more larger compasse. And Cafar himselfe bought his entrance with such losse to the Romans that no Emperor after affaied the like, before aged Claudius, whose opinion was, that thence the remembrance of his fucceeding glory should

But when the props of that Empire began for to faile, as nothing can bee firme in this still-wearing world, the Saxons, for their valour a second triumphant nation, began as it were where the Ro-mans left: for belides the continuall possession of their owne country, as in that case vnpartiall Tacitus doth tell vs; their legions were transported into all parts of the world, and without whom almost no victory was wonne of whose power and prowesse in the expeditions of warre both Dianysus, Arranue and Seneca, doe speake. To these then likewise if the Britains gaue place, their lots came foorth with the like price of the rest, and in this Iland they bought their conquests as deere as they had done in any other part of the world . Neither was Britaine subdued by either of these nations, or their inversion and exchange of policie altered, but with as vnwilling subjection and streames of blood as had been sufed out of the fides of their mightier nations, or by them had bin tamed to follow their triumphal chariots. And more honour attributed to paffe these British feas, with more admiration only to fee the I land it selfe, then was vsually conceived of kingdomes more larger, or that lay iacent as farre from Rome. And the conquest of some small parts of Britaine in no small selfe-glory to be inscribed as trophies of their victories vpon their Coynes, and to giue sirnames to the Emperors and their sonnes: as shall be shewed, when the age of this history shall be increased with the times of the Romans affaires in this Iland. Free from subjection before the attempts of Caius Iulius Cafar by the testimony of Diodorus Siculus, and never had yeelded to any forrein power, as not prouoked by Dionysius or Hercules , nor inforced

by any to maintaine their liberties by the feats of warre. But Cafar in Gallia thirsting after nouelties, or his conceited humor to purchase renowne, made the sea seeme safe from dangers in passage, and himselfe resolute to venture his person amongst those bold and barbarous Britains: wherein he left no meanes vnaffaied for their conquest and subjection, nor his fucceffors omitted any prouident care to retaine and keepe the land in their possessions, which whilst it stood a province in their obedience was held and accounted the fairest plume in their triumphant Diadem, and the loffe thereof (if no more but only in name) as was publikely affirmed, wold proue a great detriment to the Empire. This made the Romans to defire it as they did, who befides the great glory they conceiued in the conquest, made it the granary for the westerne garifons, besides the delicate prouissons for their Emperors owne tables.

And the German Saxons straitned in their owne countries through increase of their people, or haply to supply their owne wants, infested with piracies these West parts of the world, and among all others fet the eie of their affections vpon this most beautifull Iland, and neuer left their attempts vnaffaulted till they fet the glorious diadem thereof vpon their owne heads. Changing the name Britannia into Anglia, a terme most fit to expresse that Subject, and pleasing in sound as Angelicalliike, ncither have themselues proved vnworthy of so rich a possession, that in wars have maintained, and by voiages made known her fame as far as the funne hath his beames, or the endlesse ocean her ebbes and tides. But of these things wee shall have occasion here-

And now addresse our selves to describe our ancient Britaines, and to shew their true pictures as they are reported. At first rude and vnciuil(I taske them no further then all others then were in the world, some few excepted that were only taught by God) and with the first were reclaimed to a more civill respect, both in their apparell and apprehension of litepect, both in the speak and appearance appearance in the Chapter fucceeding we will demonstrate as they are described by Casar, Plny, Dio, Herodian and others; at first altogether naked cut, and painted as thou seeft, afterwards partly clad in imitation of others which frequented their country either for traffick or conqueft; in both which manner take them as they are reported to bee by these authours, and impute no liberty in the draught to the workmans beft liking, nor thy felfe any whit disparaged to be brought from such parents, which here are set as the pillars spoken of by Iosephus, that after the flood did preserue the invented science of the celestiall bodies, lest time or elements should confume that knowledge or deuoure those rules before demonstrated: So the true portrature of our ancient progenitors may by these be preserved from the ruines of time & made our motives to be thankful vnto him that hath brought vs forth in these most civill times, and not only clad vs with the garments of humanity, but by his spirit hath guided vs vnto a celeftiall knowledge.

Chap. 7.

He understanding and apprehensions of men louded in ignorance are by a Great Philosopher compared to the eyefight of fuch men, as stand and behold things afarre-off; because both of these, though they apprehend some generall shapes and notices, yet can they not discerne of the true proportions and proprieties of their Objects. The like happeneth in the fearch and furuey, as of all other Nations, fo of our owne, of our first beginmings, our antique Customes, behaviours, habits: the true Circumstances whereof are the more difficill to find, that those things are not onely remote many de-grees beyond the kenning of our Eye, (yea so-manie Ages from the times wherein we liue,) but are also shadowed and enwrapped in manifold vacertainties and contrarieties, wherewith euen those Writers have perplexed our way, who vndertooke to be both our Guides and our Lights. Notwithfranding, our purpose being to propose vnto the eye of our now glorious and gorgious Britaines, fome generall draughts of our poore and rude Progenitours, (that as King Agathocles in his chiefe feasts vied onely earthen diffes to pur himselfe in minde that his Father was buta Potter, fo wee may remember that true Britifb Nobilitie is more in Vertue then in Auncestors ;) let vs first see what the principall notes and markes are whereby the persons of those first Britaines were made so remarkeable among all other Nations.

(2) These Notes were chiefly three; first, their going naked; fecondly, their staining and colouring of their whole Bodies; thirdly, their cutting, pincking and pouncing of their flesh, with garnishments (for so they thought them) of fundry shapes and fashions, as the two first ensuing leases or Portraitures doe repre-fent. Touching all which, the reports of Authors are very discrepant; and therefore, sith light is gotten our. by collition of flintes, wee will effay, whether out of those Writers contradictions (brought to the stroke, and confronted together) we may firike fome glimering light to direct vs how to paint them forth, who lo delighted in painting themselues.

(3) First touching their going maked, the autho-. The first note rity of Cefar must ouersway (as being auncientest) the too-generall reports of such others, as seeme to relate that the Britaines generally vied no Couerture, as neglective either of weathers injurie, or of civill modefty; forhe faith, interiores plerig, pellibus funt vefitti: the In-land men for the most part were clad with skinnes. And yet these Inlanders were the rudest of all the reft, the Kenlifb and Sea-borders being full of humanity and little differing from the French civilitie.

So that when Herodian faith, Veftis v/um non cognofcunt, nec induuntur quidem, They neither know the vic of Herodian. Garments:nor put any on; either he speaks on hearesay, or his large report must bee restrained to some certaine Persons, Times, and Places. And for certaine Persons and Times indeed Plynie somewhat limits it, Plini. faying, that their married weomen, both elder and fonger, (coniuges, nurufa) in certaine festiuals vsea to goe starke naked: so doth Dio also for certaine Places: in their Tents (faith he) they luned naked and onshod, where he feemeth to allow them fome concreure abroade The like may be supposed in time of Winter or War where Herodian himselfe saith onely, plerag, torporis nudi, A great part of their body was bare, (4) Itmay feeme hereby, that those Originals of Particular Nations were not much vnlike that first beginning of the vniuerfall profemination of Mankind, when our first Parents innocencie walked in naked simplicitie: the foundations of all things being, as farthest from our light, so more simple and farte from those artificiall fraudes, which some call Wit and cunning. And though an ancient Father be saint opion in millaken, in conceauing that by the foure letters of the name of Adam, were fignified the foure quarters D. de file. of the World, (that being an Hebrue name of three darles, North, etters, and not a Greeke of foure) yet all those Quarters of the World participate somewhat of Adams dispolitions; and as all Naturall things retourne by ourse to that whereof first they were framed, so if Lawes, discipline, and Customes, did not restraine men, they would in time, of themselues revolue to that first neglective condition, and carelessenes of those outward respects whence men are now named

(5) But in our Britaines, three reasons there seeme of this their going wnelouthed. First, their hardines, which was partly naturall, and partly acquired by | Harding! practife of their bodies to durance: of whom Diorecords that all of them had an excellent habit in tolerating unger cold and labours insomuch as they could endure to abide many daies together in the water up to the chinne without any food at all; that they would line in the woods on roots and barkes of trees; though one kind of foode he there mencioneth vnknowne in our times, whereof ving to make as much as a beane onely, they were not Subject either to hunger or thirft. No maruaile, if those who would endure this, could endure the want of garments : especially in a foile whereof wee find this | See Chap.1.5. 10 Euloge. Tu nimium nec stricta gelu, O.c.

Norfreezing cold, nor scorching hot thou art a Twixt both thou hold ft the meane and yleafing ft part.

The like patience we find even now not onely in the wilder Irish, and Virgineans, but in rogues and Wanderers of our owne Countrey, who often pittileffe of Rr 2

themselues voluntarily deprive their Bodies of this Protection against the Aires offence, to procure pittie of others. And what speake we of these? seeing euen children for Custome, and Women for pride, wil fuffer their Breaks, and most tender parts of their Body, to be exposed not only to offence of weather, but of modesty also? yea generally, the handes, and fa-ees, being of most subtilest sence, yet by custome are enabled now to endure that, which by the like cufrome the olde Britaines endured in their whole Bodies; whereby Plutarch thinkes they ofually lined so long enen to the age of fixescore, the externe cold keeping-in and augmenting their internall heate.

(6) Asabilitie to endure colde, fo ignorance (in many) of meanes to prevent it, may feeme another occasion of these Britaines nakednes. The Romans (it feemes) in their old Confuls times, and after, had not the skill nor vie of Hats, Breeches, Ge. That Britaine abounded with mooll and other materials for cloa-thing, is past all doubt, for which cause, by one Panegyrick, it is named Riche in Pasturage, which by another is thus explicated, that therein was an infinite theris thus expirated, to attheren was an injuste multitude of tame cattell both with V dders full of milke, and loaden with Fleeces to the ground, Sothen Woll was not wanting, but Will, or Skill, the latter in most likelihood: for, as Strabe faith, that though those frutting V dders yeelded great flore of milk, yet some of them had not skill to make cheese, and having so rich grounds, pet had not the art of tillage, to their theepe might haue such heavy steeces, yet some of their Owners no cunning to keepe themselues warme therewith. Some of them, I say; for otherwise, as Pliny, touching Tillage, it is a likely to the control of them. giues light to Strabe, witnessing, that others of them were to good Husbands as to manure their grounds with Marle, as likewise doth Dissorders, laying they had skill to make drinke of Barley: so probable is it, that those other who were by Cafar and Tacitus said to be so like the French in conditions, had also some part of their Art in fitting the Burthen of their Sheepes backes to couer their owne,

(7) The last reason of such their going nake fometimes, was out of an opinion that no cloath so adorned them, as their painting and damasking of their Bodies, for which cause (saith Herodian) they mould not cour themselves, left then their gay painting should not be seene: but Pomponius Mela makes doubt, whether their thus painting themselves were for ornament or for some other ofe; which doubt Casar seems to resolve, as if the men did it; because it made them looke more terrible in warre. (8) And thus we are now orderly fallen on the

(8) And thus we are now garderly tallen on the fector of choice three notes appropriated by Assistant our Britishnes, which is their painting and flassis and the resistance of the resistance o Authorisative in increasion of this time primarys, (as we finewed) on the name, perchance allo in the fabblance of that wherewith they frained themselves, and formewhat allo in the calor it feller. The high fame cafer calles luteum, which yet in vulgar acception is thought to be some yellow substance, as Plany cals lute- Plany. amoui, theyoke of the Egge; Plany Lind (Easth the Frenchmen call it glassum, describing it to be an herbe like Plantayne, which Oribasius (as scarned Cambden fhewerth) doth terme Vitrum, in which fense Mela is Mela. vnderstood, to say, that they were stained ritro (and not ritro) it being generally taken to be wead, from those ancient times hithertow feel for the furest staine. But for the colour which is made, Cafar and the rest agree, it was Cieruleus, blewifbor azure, which colour the Cambro-Britannes doe yet call glace, whence our glasse for windowes (called also vitrum) seemeth by reason of the colour, to have taken name. Onely Pliny Pliny leaueth fome scruple, in saying, that the naked painted women imitated the Æthiopian colour; which must be vinderstood either comparatuely, in respect of People white and unpainted, or because blew a farre-of hath the appearance of blacke.

(9) That the Britaines tooke their Name from See Chap. 2 5.7

this painting, hath been already shewed out of Isi-dore, who writes, that they had that name from a word of their some language, wherein Breeth fignifieth as much as painted or stained; but whether those other Inhabitants of the more Northerne parts of this Iland, called also Picti or painted, had their name vpon the same ground, & whether they were some branch of the British stocke, or of some transmarine Colonie, it is a question not yet decided. Pomponius Latus, and some other, deriue them from Germany, some from the Pictones in France; but Beds, from Scythia, whence faith hee, they are reported to have come into Ireland in a few long bottomes, and finding no scating there to haue entered into Britaine. Though Beda his authoritie be venerable, yet the learned find reasons to induce them rather to beleeue, that they were the re-maines of those ancient Britaines which either inhabited the North-part of this Iland, before the Romanes entrance, or which (vpon their Conquest) fled thether to avoid the Romifb yoake, where the difficulties of the aire & foile protected them from the Romanes ambition and inualion. Whereto Tacitus well accordeth, faying, that Agricola droue the Romanes Encmics (he meanes the more vntractable Britaines) into those parts, as it were into another Iland. And it is thought incredible, that those Enemies of the Romanes, who cent forth against Agricola an Army of thirty thousand strong, and who so vexed Seurus, that in one Expedition he loste seurus, thou and of his Ronanes, & their Aiders were lo vtterly extinct, as that none of them remained; but that rather they wonderfully multiplied, being those who afterward much perflexed and ouerranthe Romane Province, and to whom (not vnlikely) fome other, fuch as Beda mentioneth, did afterward joine themselues.

(10) If we would adde res fons unto Authorities, to proue that these Picts were no other then that multiplied offpring of those Britaines, we could produce their * language, their manners, their kind of Go-uernment (all bearing British Resemblance) to conner of painting is an undoubted marke in the Chil-dren representing of what Parents they were borne. That they were pointed, Claudian flewers, alling them, 7 he Pitter, 6 ray pomed, which fifter well expounds, 7 the Pitter, 6 ray pomed, which fifter well expounds, 7 the Pitter, 6 ray pomed and their name from their Politics, and their name from their Politics, and the politics of the Common for the Politics of the Polit ded them from their other Provincial Britaines, this name (Pictes) for diftinctions take was in vice among it them; before which times, yea and long after, they were knowne to Writers by no other name then Britaines, and the Romaine Emperor, Commodus, Seucrus, Bassianus, Geta, vpon the Conquests of them instilled themselnes Britannici, British (not Pictish) Conquerors. But after the Romane tongue had prevailed with the Romane fword, the Britaines themselves vsed to name any thing painted by the name of Picte; as may bee any tining painter oy une name or Peter, as may bee gathered out of Peteins, who daith, that the Britiste called certaine Shallops, Pites, because their failes, tasking and Marriners apparell, were coloured blow, the very coloure, wherewith thele British Pites (as "Gme. where they are truely called) wied so staine them gives to the pites a West and the pites and t selues. He next Nation that to he Britains obtained noffellion, and foueraignty of this Hand, were the Romans, and of them Caius Iulius Cafar the first; what time their State had vndergone all kinds of gouernments, and now afbired almost to their highest pitch of glory. This Cafar bearing the office of Questorship in Spaine, and naturally disposed for great affaies, was thereto the more incited at the fight of Alexanders portraiture, flanding in the temple of Hercules at * Gades, where beholding it with great admiration fell into a fudden diflike of himfelfe, and (as Alexander in feeing Achilles tombe) with an ambitious, yet honorable emulation, fighed and faid: Haft thou at my yeres atchieued the conquest of the whole world, my selfe hitherto having done no memorable act? Ever after which he disdained that his petty charge, and made suite to the Senate to be dismissed, holding that the cloude which onershadowed his following and (soone after) flowing fortunes. And forthwith returning to Rome observed every occasion that might make him gratious in the peoples eies, having the advantage of the time which then was swaied with most dislikes : and entring into many factions, yea and some of them not without suspirion of conspiracy, did notwithstanding so manage his proceedings, that their con-structions were euer made honorable, and himselfe the man by all affents that did support the glory of their State; vnto whom offices of high dignities were affigned, which daily increased his credit and power. And in the time of his Confulfity, tooke vpon him the government of Gallia, where he remained ten yeeres together, and forbare no occasion for warre were it neuer so vniust or dangerous: Insomuch that framing a Bridge of wood ouer the broad and fwift river Rhene, he entred the country of the Sweuians, being the first Romane that affailed the Germans: And thence with victory returning, found his charge

the Gaules in quiet : both which fortunes were as

Cafar charged so fiercely vpon the enemie, that hee put them to flight; but wanting his horsemen to follow the chase, (which as yet were not arrived) he proceeded no further, but encamped his hoft vpon a great plaine, not farre from the Sea, and not without likelihood thought to be Barham Downe: for so neere lay it vpon the shoare, that thence he beheld the dispersion and losse of his 18. ships (comming vnder saile with his horsemen to his assistance) through the violence of a florme, and rage of Sea.

(7) In the meane time the Britaines, that after flight had againe recovered head, and in their affemblies aduitedly confidered their imminent dangers, concluded their submission for the safest remedie, and to that end fent their fecond Embassadours vnto Cafar, with whom Comius before remembred was imploied, whom they had retained in strait prison for

(8) These Britaines, although rude in regard of the Romanes, and vnmatchable to them in educated civilitie, yet were so skilfull in the affaires of warre. and so ready to discerne the least advantage, that they easily perceived the weaknesse of Casars power, both in want of horsemen to equal their magons, wherein chiefly stood the strength and order of their fight, as also of ships for service and safety, as occasions should be offred : whereby their mindes touching their pro mised submission began to waver, and the matter with better advice to be pleaded in their assemblies; with better adulce to be preated in then agentone, for that not only these forestaid ships for Casas supply were dispersed and hindred, but cuen his owne by were dispersed and hindred, but cuen his owne distributed the state of minds distributed. fleet, which lay then in harbour by the rage of winde and fea, (beging then fpring tide, and the moone in the full) was not onely filled with water. but also their tacklings, failes, and anchours spoiled or lost, the violent storme so dashing the bulkes one against another, that their bruifed bottomes were thereby made unfit for burden.

(9) This lose was to great, that it is accounted the first of the three aduerse fortunes which ever happened to Casiar in all his proceedings: and it was so well observed by the Britaines, that immediately they intended a revolt, and in Counsell vrged this, as the materiall point that breathed hope and life to their former liberies, condemning themselius as impious if they should refuse to joine consent with the heatuens, whose elements had thus farre fought for their freedome and full deliuerance, affuring themselues (if on this advantage they might cut off these new quefts) that neuer any afterward would aduenture to enter Britanny in hostile manner.

And thereupon they began both to flacke the performance of couenants, and daily to withdraw themfelues from Cafars Campe, which gaue him infl occa-fion to suspect whereat they aimed. And to preuent their proceedings he as wifely wrought: for first repairing his Nauie with the huls, timber, and tackling of the most bruifed ships, with the losse of twelve fbips only, the rest were made able to brooke the least And prouiding against the advantage of the enemie, he sent foorth the fenenth Legion for forrage to supplie any occasion.

(10) This Legion taking the coast cleere, and lit-tle furmiling so sudden a revolt, fell to the siekle and fithe like haruest labourers, and laid their weapons Jame interest accountry, and said their weapons apart, milrufting no Exemie. Now the Britaines as forward to put in practife what they had determined, closely had laid themselues in ambush, for thirher they knew the enemie would come, a peece of corne there flanding, whereas in all other parts harnest was past: and so having these workmen in their danger, part : and to maning there were now in contragner; uddenly fell youn them, flaying fome, and forcing the reflout of their array, who not knowing the or-der of their gloss, can't temelines in a ring (the best defensitue forme of embattelling) and shood on their guard as they might: but had they not happily beene rescued, Cafar had lost one whole Legion at that into the streame. But about midnight the winde failing, and their failes becalmed, the tide diverted their courfe : fo that in the dawning he well perceived his intended place for landing to be paffed.

(2) Therefore falling agains with the change of tide, and indeuours of their Oares, about noone the same day hee recourred the shoare, even in the same place (and that without any shew of resistance) where he had found best landing the Summer before. There in convenient manner he encamped his hoft, and by certaine Fugitiues got notice of the power and place of the enemie.

(3) And left delay fhould afford them aduantage, he committed the gouernment of his ships at anchor to Qu. Atrius, and his campe on land to the guard of ten Cohorts, besides the strength of three hundred horsemen; and himselfe with the rest about the third watch of the night tooke their march towards the enemie;proceeding with fuch celeritie, that by the day dawning they were entred twelue miles higher into the Continent: where seeking to passe a river, which Cefar relifted at is supposed to be the water Stower, the Britaines with their dares and chariots began in most terrible manner to affault the Romanes. But being at length by them repulsed, tooke into a wood strongly fortified both by nature and mans industrie. For in the time of their owne diffensions they had formerly made this place one of their strongest fortresses, and had cut down many trees, which ouerthwart the waies of en-

Whose chase Cafar forbade both in regard the day was necre spent, as also that the countrey was altogether vnknowen to the Romanes. But the next day the pursuit being begun, sudden newes was brought from Q. Atrius, that most of his ships the night before by a violent tempest were cast on Land, their bulks shaken, their cables broken, and anchours loft. Cafars experience in like mishaps the Summer before, made him so much more ready to preuent the worst. And therefore recalling his forces, in all haste returned to his Campe, finding the relation too true fearing the like danger, by the new established authoritie of Casibelan, had made over into Gallia, craving Calars assistance to set him in his right. (6) Callibelan (if among these authenticke Authors the British Writers may bee heard) was the brothors the British Writers may bee neard) was the pro-ther of King * Lud, and in the nonage of his nephewes of King Lud. gouerned the Trinobants, whose bounds hee fought to enlarge vpon the bordering Countries of his neighbours, and in his forcunes had so borne himselfe, that he was much maligned, and more feared. But now all their dangers yoked alike in a common perill, they laid aside private grudges, and held him the only man to support the strength of their troubled and declining estate, and by a common consent made him Geming clatte, and by a common content made nim of merall of their warres. The expectation of whole pro-ceedings he long delated not, but with a fierce and hot encounter did affaile the Romans, and so manfully difcharged the parts of his place, that in the light of the whole Campe Quintus Laberius a militarie Tribune was flain, (in memorie wherof the place as yet, though fomewhat corruptly, is called Inl-laber) and Cafar himselfe professeth he learned many points of martiall policie by their brane and running kinde of en-

(7) But his next daies service prooved not so fortunate; for the Romans having learned their owne defects by the former daies experience, laid afide their weightie armour, that with the more facilitie they might both affaile the enemies, and with like nimble neffe auoid their furie, they having now bestowed their powers dispersedly, and scattered their troupes into companies, wherby the Romans were still matched with fresh supplies. A policie no doubt of no small consequence, had not destiny determined the fatall Subjection of the Britaines, and Fortune now raised the Romans almost to the height of their Monarchie.

(8) For this failing, the Britainer neuer after flewed themseliues with any vnited resistance, but having resistance. loft the day departed, thinking it better to secure euerie priuate by his owne meanes, then by a generall ne prinate oy nis owne incairs, then by a general power to hazard all, as hopeleffe any, more to vphold that which the heauens (they faw) would haue down. And Cafibelan himfelfe defpairing of happy fuccesse, drew into his owne territories, keeping with him not aboue 4, thousand wagons. And fearing the Romans further approch, fortified the river Thamifis (then paf-fable onely in one place) with fharpned stakes bound about with lead, and driven so deepe into the bot tome, that Beda and Affer report them so to remaine in their times. All which notwithstanding, the Romans passed with the repulse of their enemies, and Cafar, who grew now to the height of his honour, marched further into the Continent, and comming forward, was met by Ambaffadours from the chiefest Totward, was nice by Announkaous non the Lineau City Citie of the Trinolouste, which for hof all the Srates profered fubmission, and promifed fubicition, with this intreatie allo, that Mandubrace (who being C. afass fol lower, and doubtleffe the contriuer of this submiffion) might be Gouernour of their Citie,

Thither Cafar came, and with little loffe or la bour won the place, and many of the milerable Britaines both taken and slaine. Casibelan now despairing of his owne power, farre vnable to match, and much leffe to ouermatch his Enemies, infligated the Gouernours of Kent, being foure in number, Cingetorix, Carnilius, Taximangulus, and Segonax, (whom Cafar terleft, was sine with

Fter the death of Cafar, thus flaine in the Senate, Octavian (the grand-childe of Iulia, Cefars sister) whom hee had adopted, and declared his heire, returned vnto Rome from * Apollomia, where he studied Philosophie, intending to profecute the revenge of Ca-

fars death; where falling at oddes with Marcus Antonius a man of great spirit and power, and setting him-selfe against Brutus and Cassus, with their Complices, for the murder of his vncle, fecretly wrought the friendship of the Citizens, before whose eies also Cafars wounds seemed yet to bleed.

(2) These factions thus begun, grew to such height, that in the Senate-house their causes were pleaded, and by the infligation and eloquence of Marcus Tullius Cicero, Antonius was proclaimed enemie to the State : against whom Octavian was sent, with Enfignes of Conful, and title Proprator, being yet not twentie yeeres of age; which duty and office he fo well difcharged in the parts of a valiant Captaine, that Antom

was forced out of the field, albeit in this battle the one Conful was flaine, and the other deadly wounded. For which service so effected, he entred Rome in Triumph though the glory thereof was much blemished being obtained but in an intestine and civill warre. Marcus Antonius, to recouer himselfe, and make good his cause, ioined friendship with Marcus Aemilius Lepidus, Capitaline of the horse, who together interpoled themselues against Ostanians proceedings; but by me-diation of friends all three were reconciled, and iointly crected that forme of gouernment which thence was named the Triumurat: for the establishment whereof they had seuerall jurisdictions assigned them : to Lepidus, Africa, whereof he was present Gouernour: to Antony, the Countries as well of Greece as Alia, that lay betwixt the Ionian Sea, entring at the gulfe of Ve-

(7) The next day the battaile was againe begun and maintained on both parts with equal advantage, till C. Sidius Geta enforced the Britaines to retire whereby the victory rested in the Romanes: for which exploit Triumphall honours were assigned him, although he had not yet attained to the Confular degree. In this Conflict, Velpasian hardly escaped, being fore oppressed by the Enemy, and in such fort, that had not Titus (his renowmed fonne) come to rescue, he had beene flaine, whose valour afterwards was tried in one and thirtie battailes, and in the Conquest of the Ile of Vioht

(8) After this conflict, the Britaines withdrew themselues into places of more aduantage, and in the mouth of Thamifis neere her fall into the Sea, palled the shallowes and firme grounds in safetie, whereas the Romans ignorant of both, brought many into danger, and in their distressed passage, were sharpely affailed by the Enemie, in which turmoile, a bloody battaile was begunne, wherein Togodumnus a Britifb Prince, brother to Catacratus, and sonne to Cunobeline, was flaine: Notwithstanding, the courage of the Britains was nothing abated, but rather exasserated to a further reuenge: for effecting whereof, new forces were gathered, and confluence of people affembled from each part of the Ile. Plantins the Lieutenant feing daily the increase of their power, respassin imploied in other parts, and himselfe streitned in a place of danger, proceeded no further, but sent word to the Emperour of the doubtfull eftate of their affaires. by decree allowed Claudius his Triumphall ornaments. But he supposing that such a bare title of honour was inferiour to the Maiestic of an Emperour, and willing of himselfe also to enterprise some exploit whereby hee might winne the glory of a compleat Triumph, made choice before all other Prounces, of Britaine, attempted by none fince Iulius Cafar of famous Memory. And with great firength entred into the journey, having with him a mightie Armie both of horse and foote, as also Elephants, a beast of great bignesse and burthen, Elephants first brought into Britance whose strangenesse then amazed the Britaines, and whose Carcases falling in this Land, their late found bones (no doubt) haue bred our errour, beeing fuppoled to be of men, and not of bealts. Claudius now disarming the Britaines, remitted further punishment either vpon their bodies or confiscation of their goods: The which his fauourable elemencie moued those distresfed Britaines to fuch liking and love, that they ereffed a Temple and Altar in his name, and gaue him divine honour, as a God: The rest as vnable to resist, profered their fubmissions, and promited a peaceable subicction under the Romanes governement.

(11) These things thus atchieued, at the end of

This Generall knowing his ownestrength vnable to match the enemie, by policie thought to supplie that want, and having advantage of the Countrey, remooued the warre vnto the Ordo uices, which is now North-wales, where all ioined to him that either feared or disdained to hold peace with the Romans. The more to animate their mindes, the Leaders went about exhorting and encouraging the Souldiers, taking all occasions of feare from them, and putting them in hope, with all inducements of refolu-tion: especially Carattaem, who coursing hither and thither, protested that day and that battle should be the beginning either of a recourred libertie, or else a perpetuall feruitude and bondage: and euer nee cal-led vpon the names of his valiant Ancestors, who formerly had chased Cafar the Diltator out of the Ile, by whose valour they were deliuered from Hatchets and Tributes, and enjoied freely their wives and childrens bodies undefiled. The Souldiers also themselves shewed as great forwardnesse, and as Echoes redoubled his words, vowing according to the Religion of their Countrie neuer to yeeld for wounds or life, which they all were ready to facrifice in the cause of their liberties. This their apparant resolution much appalled the Romans cheerefulnes, and most of all the Captaines and Leaders, who before their faces faw the River, on both fides of them had the hanging hils, and the Fort commodious for the enemie, but deadly vnto them: all which notwithstanding the common Souldiers Offering bis care. despised, and demanded the battle. Ostorius, whose fludie was chiefly to performe the parts of a Generall, passed the River with some little difficultie, and leading his Armie vp to the Rampire, was met with such a showre of darts, that many therewith were wounded and flaine. Yet at length breaking downe those rude compacted stones, joined battle with the enemie, and afront came close to handy strokes; wherein the Britaines having better courage then armour (for they had neither headpeece nor coat of defense) were fore galled with their lauellings and two-handed

Neither was his name meanly effected of at Rome; for whilest Cafars worth and power was there commended, a more glorious conceit was held of the conquered Caractabus: and against his comming to the Citie Caractaculed in the people from all parts were affembled, as to behold some notable and most rare spectacle. The Emperours Guard in armes and good order were placed in the field before the Campe, thorow whom the Captiues and Trophies were carried, and presented after this manner : first the vassals of Caractaeus going formost bowed their bodies to the people as they pasfed, and feemed by their ruefull countenances to difcouer the sense of their calamitie. The caparisons, his chaines, and other spoiles gotten in the warres. were carried after them. Then Caractacus his brethren, wife, and daughter followed, and last of all himselfe, whose attire and stout behaujour filled the peoples eies with wonder and delight. His bodie, for Hishabitand the most part, was naked, and painted with figures of attire diuers beafts. Hee ware a chaine of iron about his necke, and another about his middle : the haire of his Exhifter magn. head hanging downe in curled lockes, couered his backe and shoulders, and the haire of his upper lip parted on both fides, lay upon his breast. Neither was his behaulour lesse noted then the strangenesse of his habit : for he neither hung downe his head, as daunted His vad with base feare; nor craued mercie, as the rest; but with a confident spirit, and bold countenance, held on till he came before the Imperiall Seat, where ma-king his stand, and a while beholding Cafars Maiefly, at last with great courage spake to this purpose.

The Forragers also and troope of horse that were sent to aid them they put to slight. These affronts touched offorius to the quick, and lest their aids should grow to a greater head, he sent forth certaine light-harneffed companies, which with the Legionary Souldiers vndertooke the bastle, and with finall oddes was it continued till the night came, and parted them: divers other Skirmifbes afterwards were made, though for the most part in woods and marishes, whence taking their advantage in fallying forth, they many times prevailed, fometimes by ftrength, fometimes by meete courage, and sometimes by chance; neither were they alwaies commanded by their Cap-taines, but many times fought voluntary and without

(18) The principal motive that induced the rest to take Armes, was the example of the Stlare, who were most resolutely bent, as beeing exasperated by certaine speeches that the Romane Emperour himselfe had ofed, which was, that as the name of the Sugambri was destroied, and the people transported into Gallia, so the memorie of Starres should vtterly bee extinguished: And in this heate as men desperate (whole destinics were read and lots cast already) they intercepted the feattered troopes of the Romanes that vncircumfpectly wasted and spoiled the Country, taking of them many prifoners, and recouering rich booties, which they fent and distributed amongst their neighbours; whereby many other were drawne to reuolt : These proceedings sate so neere Ostorius his heart, who with long cares and trauels had wearied his spirits, spent the strength of his bodie, and thereunto had no wadded the discontentment of his minde, that in thefe vexations hee gaue vp the Ghoft, the Silures reioicing that so worthy and victorious a Captaine was failen in their warres,

(19) But Cludius Cefar, left the Province (hould make head, presently sent Aulus Didius for his Anlas Didisa Lieutenant into Britaine; where, notwithstanding all his hafte, he found all out of frame. For Manlus Va-Tacis, Annal , 12 lens with his Legion had encountred the Britaines with ill fucceffe, yet not so bad as the Ilanders gaue Marline Valen foorth, thinking thereby to terrific their new-eftablished Gouernour: which report himselfe also in policie was contented to augment, thereby to purchase more praise in appeasing so dangerous stirres; or if hee could not, to retaine his own credit without his valours impeachment. These resisters had made many inroads into the subdued Countries; against whom vpon his Didius for a first arrivall, Didius entred the field, and for a while kept them in awe. (20) But Venutius a very expert man in Militarie affaires (trufty to the Romaines, and defended by their power lo long as the mariage betwixt him and Cartifmandua continued) began a new rebeilion: for Cartifmandaa (in special) fattour with the Romanes for the delinery of Caractaeus) abounding in wealth, peace, &

pleafures(which commonly are the Nurles of licentious liuing) fell in loue (as before was touched) with Vellocatus her hutbands feruant, and harneffe-bearer, & forgetting her owne honour, preferred him before Venutins, and laboured to make him King. The good-will of the Country notwithstanding went generally vpon the lawfull husband: who being deepely touched with this open iniurie, raifed a power against her and her Paramour. At the sirst this quarrell was onely betwirt them, vntill that Cartif-mandua by policie had taken her husbads brother, and some of his neerest kindred, prisoners. Whereupon the next Inhabitants fearing her purposes, and distaining to be brought under the yoake of a wo-man so defamed, declared themselves for enutius,& with a choice band of youthfull Soldiers inuaded her Territories: whereof Didius Tait. biff. having intelligence, fent certain Cohorts to second her, and encounter them. Inwhich conflict, the Romans for Cartifmandua did prevaile; yet the kingdome remained to Venutius, and the warres still vnto them.

(21) For the Silures were not altogether quieted, & a Legion commanded by Cafius Nafica, fought luckily against the Britaines. In all which stirres Didise in person was absent, as being stricken in yeares, and having received many honours, held it sufficient to execute his charge by the afsiftance of others. The State of Britain thus standing, let vs so leaue it, during this Emperous raigne, which now began to draw to-wards his last period, by the working of Agrippina his wife, and by her vpon this occasion.

(5) And laftly, to fill vp the measure of his bloudie crueltie, he crucified Peter vpon the Croffe, and beheaded Paul with the fword, two principall Apolles of Iefus Christ, and worthy instruments of the worlds faluation; and forgetting the Maiestie of his estate, fell into the finke of contempt and all finnes, giving his minde leave to digest all vncleannesse, and his bodie ouer to worke any base exercises, attending nothing besides his Harpes and Harlots, whereby a carelesse (but yet a cruel) gouernment was intertained, and the Senate fashioning themselues to feed his loose humors froue each to outfirip other in their bafe flatteries.

(6) In this state the Provinces subjections began to stand doubtfull, and the greatnesse of the Empire to Roman ouercharge the foundation ; for the Parthians under Tacit. Agual, 15. In which time of Combustion, though little be recorded of the British affaires, yet because the Monarchy of this Hand was then and long afterinuested in the Imperiall dignitie, we may not omit to speake somewhat of the ensuing Emperours, as the chiese Gouernours of this kingdome. Vpon Neroes declining, divers there were (as Vindex and Virginius, Nymphidius and Sophonius) let vp against him but Galba for his reputed integritic got the Garland from them all; who little dreaming of the Imperiall Diademe, fortune set it vpon his head before his hand had toucht the same: for Vindex in Gallia having proclamed him Emperour, and himselfe in Arragon not free from Neroes hatred, hee fought rather to hazard his life with the Glorie of a Crowne, then depend vpon his mercie, who had fent fecretly the fentence of his death. And therefore mounting the Tribunall, the more to impresse a fresh remembrance of former Galba his policie crucitics, he placed before his throne, the Images of certaine Nobles executed by Nero, with some personages sent for out of exile, whose presence might prouoke a deeper edge of hatred, and his Army about him readic for mutation, thefe, or the like words he (2) My fellow Souldiers and friends, wee at this

CHAPTER IX.

His short time of Galbaes gouernement, with the conspiracies against his Predecessour, admitteth fmall remembrances of our British affaires : which Prouince (faith Tacitus) among all other stirres against both Nero and Galba, held amiry, and stood in quiet , whether it was the farre distance of place, Senered by Sea from the seditions of the Revolters; or that by continuall service against the Enemie the malice of their humours were spent, it is vncertaine. Therefore a while to digreffe from the Succession of our British Monarkes, and to fill up the emptinesse of those Times with matters incident to our selues, let it not seeme either tedious or superfluous, to speake of the planting of his Kingdome in this Iland, whose Rule in short time extended to the Ends of the Earth; Christianity fup. and whose Ambassadours (as some haue written) about the midst of Neroes Raigne, and in the yeere of Christs Incarnation sixty three approached for the Inhabitants faluation, Aruiragus then fwaying the Scepter of this Kingdome.

(5) But yet there are others, who vpon a very good ground from the words of Gildas (the most ancient of our British Historians) will have the Sunne of the Goffelllong before to have rifen in this our west, and this Iland of Britains to have enjoied the very morning of his Aftent, the brightnesse thereof piercing thorow the missic clouds of errour, and shining heere in Britaine even in the daies of Tiberius, towards whose end Christ suffered his death, and by whose indulgence towards Christians, their profession was propagated farre and neere. Which affertion the said Gildus doth not deliuer coldly or doubtingly, but with great confidence, & relying vpon good grounds, as it appeareth when he faith, Scimus, &c. Wee know for certainty, that this was in the latter times of Tiberius. Which was immediately after our bleffed Samours To which untontroleable testimonie some others have added (though not perhaps on forndoubted warrant) that S. Peter the Applie preached the word of life in this I land, as to other Gentles he did, for whom God had chosen him, that from his mouth they might heare the Gospell and beleette, (as himselfe allegeth) and that hee heere founded Churches; and ordained Priests and Descons, which is reported by Simon Metaphrastes out of the Greeke Antiquities, and Guilielmus Eisingrenius in the first of his Centurie, who saith that Peter was here in Neroestime; whereas Baronius thinketh it was in the raigne of Claudius, when the lemes were banished Rome, and that therefore Paul in his Epifile to the Romans mentioneth him not. Indeed Baronius and some others plead very hotly for S. Peters preaching heere : but I fee not well how it can stand either with Eusebius his account, which keepes him fo long at Rome after he was Biftop there, or with Onuphrius, who denieth that he went west-ward (being expulsed by Claudius) but to Ierusalem, and thence to Antioch, where he listed till the death of Claudius: whence it must follow, that if Peter were heere at all it was before ever he went to Rome, and that the Gol pell was preached heere before it was in Rome, if Peter were the first (as some hold) that preached there: both which may be the more propable, if wee consider the huge multitudes of Christians (fifteene thousand faith Baronius) which dispersed themselves into all parts of the world vpon the martyring of S. Stenen at Ierufalem, (which was presently upon the death of Christ) and that Ioseph of Arimathea was one of that number, Baronius doth confesse. I am heere contented to step ouer that Monkish tale reported by Alure. dus Rinallensis (the writer of King Edward the Confes fors life) that a holy man (forfooth) studious and carefull for a Gouernour to succeed, was in his sleepe told by S. Peter that the Kingdome of England was his, wherein himselfe had first preached, and would also provide him Successours. For seeing it was a dreame, for a dreame wee leave it, and Peter among the other Elders to attend his Throne, that now fitteth in glorious Maiestie, and who in this life minded no fuch earthly preheminence, no not to divide betwixt brethren, though the Kingdome and rule of all

B. Rhenan, in his Hift of Germany.

(9) And much about these times (as Beatus Rhenanus in his Historie of Germanie, Pantaleon and others doe report) one Suctonius a Noble mans sonne in Britaine converted to the Faith by the first Planters of the Gospell in this Iland, and after his Baptisme called Beatus, was sent by the Brethren from hence vnto Rome, to be better instructed, and further directed by Saint Peter himselfe; and returning thorow Switzerland, found fuch willingnesse and flocking of the people to heare and receive the Dollrine of Christ, that he there staied and built an Oratorie not farre from the lake Thun, and neare the Towne called Vnderfewen, wherein preaching and praiers he imploied his time to the day of his death, which happened in the yeare of grace 110.

And that there were Christians in Britain at these times I make no questio, thogh some exceptions may be taken against the Monk of Burton the reporter therof, who kinth in the 141 yeare and range of Hadri-an, nine masters of Grantester were basiseed themetory or preached to others the Gospellin Britain; howfocuct he faileth in the Emperours name, which yeare was the fecond of Antonins Pins his fucceffor, and afcribeth to these men Schoole-degrees; altogether vnknowne for nine hundred yeares after, yet these do not hinder the truth of the thing, though that Monke was none of the best Historians. It is reported also that Patricke the Irish Apostle, and Canonized Saint, long before the Patrick the Irish Raigne of King Lucius preached the Gospell in many places of Wales; As also that Ninianus Bernicius of the race of the British Princes converted the Picts to the Religion of Christ. Vinto these aforesaid authorities and testimonies howsoeuer we stand affected: yet it is certaine by Chemnitius citing Sabellicus, that the Britaines were with the first Connerts: And Tertullian, the minimum as who lived within two hundred yeares of Christs Na- Trides, ex Sales tiuitie, sheweth no leffe: Who the more to prouoke the Tewes against whom he wrote, calleth to witnesse the fruitfull increase of the Gospell of Saluation, through many Countries and Nations, and among them nameth the Britaines to have received the Word of life, the power whereof (faith he) hath pierced into those parts whither the Romanes could not come. Whence Petrus Cluniacensis supposeth the Scotish men the more ancient Christians, as not being in the like subjection to Perms Cluni, ad the Romanes, as other then were. (10) Origen, who flourished not much about two nundred yeares after Christ, in his Homilies open Ezechiel (heweth, that the first fruits of Gods haruest was gathered in the Iland of Britaine: who consented to the Christian faith by the doctrine of their Druides: that taught one onely God: with whom Hettor Boetius agreeth, faying, that some of these Druides condem- HetterBess Chro ned the worship of God in Images, and allowed not the applicatio of the God-bead vnto any vilible forme: which might be the cause why Claudius the Emperour forbad their Religion, as favouring in these things too much of Christianstie, whom likewise he banished Rome, as some from Suetonius coniecture. Of these Sustains in vin Druides wee shewed before, that their offices were most imploied about holy things, and that their dostrine Tacis. Annal. 14 chiefly confifted in teaching the immortalitie of the foule, the motions of the heavens, the nature of things, and Cafar. Com. Lib.6. the power of the Gods: yea and Postellus from others willinforce, that they prophecied likewise of a virgins ropular. conception. These were the helps, saith Tertullian, that caused the Britaines so soone to imbrace the Dostrine of Christ, and thereupon immediately after his death doth Gyldas fasten our conversion, where he writeth. dont Grans Internous Condettion, where he winceth, That the Glorious Goffell of 16 fis Chrift, which first appeared to the world in the later time of Tiberius Casar, did do Brit. euen then pread his bright beames upon this frojen Iland

So fruitfull and famous was this spreading of the Goffell, that Baptiffa Mantuan, a Christian Poet, compares the increase thereof with that of Noah, thus alluding vnto it:

Sicut aquis quondam Noc fua mifit in orbem Pignora fedatis, vt Genshumana per omnes Debita Calituum Patri daret orgia terras; Sic fua cum vellet Deus alta in regna reuerti, Discipulos quosdam transmisit ad Vltima Mundi Littora, docturos Gentes quo numinaritu Sint oranda, quibus Calum placabile Sacris. haue extended, not only to the Countries farre iacent in the Continent, but also to the Ilands situated in the Ocean it felfe, and amongst them expresty nameth this our Britaine; whose Inhabitants (laith hee) have also consented to the word which is planted in every heart, in honour whereof they have erected their Temples and Alters. And againe : Those Britaines (faith hee) which had formerly fed vpon humane flesh, making no difference betwirt the blood of man and beaft, now through the power of the word by them embraced, have learned the law of true pietie, and give themselves to a religious abstinence, and holy fasts. Of which Barbarifme S. Jerome also complained, that some of those Nations vsed to eat the buttocks of boies, and Paps of Virgins, which in their Feasts were served for the daintiest dishes. But elsewhere speaking of the Britaines conversion, he saith, that they had turned themsclues from their westerne Paganisme, and now had dire-Eted their faces towards I erufalem in the East, whose beautie shined in the word of God. (13) And thus wee see by the planting of the Gofell in this I land, the laying of the P falmist accompli-fhed, that God would give his forme Christ the Heath: n for his inheritance, and the Ends of the Earth (the proper Pfal.2.8. attribute of this our Britaine) to be his poffession. And the fuccesse in Historie most apparantly sheweth these parts (by an especiall prerogative) to bee Christs King-dome. For albeit that terusalem and Antioch may rightlie claime the precedencie of all other places, the one being as it were the chamber where Christians were first borne, and the other the font where they were first Christened with that most facred name : yet Britaine in fome other graces hath outstript them all, having the glory to be graced with the first Christian King that firft Christian euer raigned in the world, which was our renowned King. Ex Archin.Cinic Lucius, the first fruits of all the Kings that cuer laid their Crownes at the foot of our Saujours Croffe: as Britaine had the also for producing the first Christian Emperour that euer by publike authoritie established the Gosell thorow the world, which was Constantine the Great. borne and brought vp heere in Britaine by Queene Helene mothe Helena, a most vertuous and religious British Lady: vnto whose daies the succession of Christianitie did heere continue, as by the martyrdomes of many Saints under Dioclesian is apparant. Heerein also raig-King Henry the Eighth the first that quailed the Pope. ned the King that first vncrowned the head of the vsur-ping Beast, and triple-headed Cerberus, and freed the Land from his denouring Locusts : putting downe Ido-Apoc.9. latrie with Hezekiah that brake the Brasen Serpent : and with Ifaack new digged the Wels that those Philistines had stopped. And lastly hath this Iland produced that Gen.26.18. most royall and Christian Monarke, whose learned pen King James. hath first depainted Antichrist, and pierced the heart of all Papall Supremacie, as the sword of Gedeon did Zalmunna (* the Image of trouble) King of Madian.

And as a Lion hath he meet that erooked * Serpent in Zalmunta fignifi-etb, Judg. 7.20. the way of his vsurped authoritie; whereby in short Hof.13.8. time vindoubtedly the b Kall of his heart will be broken, if other Potentates likewife by his most godly example, cast off the yoke of vasfallage, and in their se-uerall Dominions gouerne (as free Princes ought) the people that GOD hath committed to their charge. So that in those and many other the like Princes of this happy Iland, most properly is performed that propheticall promife made vnto the Church of Christ:that Kings should become her nursing Fathers, and Queene. Should be her nurfing Mothers : Of both which may be truly faid to Britaine, in imitation of that of Salomon

CHRISTIAN RELIGION IN BRITAINE

(14) And of fuch power hath Christ beene in these His Possessions, that even the Hostile Kings and Conquerour's thereof, were they never fo faunge and rdolatrous at their first correction with the contract to the contract t dolatrous at their first entrance, yet when they here ror to the best had feated for a time they became milde and religion of Churt. ous, and gladly fubmitted their hearts to the Religion of those, whose necks themselves held vnder the yoke

(15) Such were the Romans in this Iland, whose Holling to Hate Deputies at the day-spring almost of Christianitie were converted; as Trebellius, Pertinax, and others, which submitted themselues to that profession, and were moriues to King Lucius more publikely to maintaine the same : as also Constantius the father of great Conflantine, that here in Britaine permitted the profession of the Gofpell, with the crections of Churches for the true service of God, and prohibited the superstitious orfhips of the Gentiles.

(16) The Saxons after them (in time, but not in Idolatrie) had neuer tafted the liuing waters of Siloh, till they were here feated in Christs Possession, where they changed their affections as farre from their wonted manners, as did the Meffengers to Iehu, which turned after his Chariot to deftroy the Altars of Baal : or as Saul and his servants, who no sooner had entred Naioth in Ramah, but that their spirits were joined to the Prophets, and the heat of their furie, with their 1.Sam. 19.20

both bloudy and barbarous, and therefore of all our

Writers commonly called the Pagan Danes; whose many defolations and ruines remaine as records of their cruelties in many places euen vnto this day: yet being a while in this Land, King Guthurn, with thirtie of his chiefe Princes and people, were drawen by the va-lourand vertue of King Alured to receive the Christian Faith, by whose bounty thereupon they enioied the possession of a faire portion of this Kingdome. And afterward Canutus, their greatest King, no sooner almost had this imperiall Diademe set vpon his head, but that hee held it his chiefe Maiestie to be the vassall of Christ, confessing him only to be King of Kings: and with fuch religious denotion as then was taught, crowned the Crucifix at Winthester with the Crowne he wore : and neuer after, thorow all his raigne, by any meanes would weare the same : and the Danes his Souldiers remaining in England, began by little and little to embrace Christianity, and in short time were al converted to the Faith. Thus then we fee the happie increase of these holy seeds springing from the sur-rowes of this blessed ground: and the Tents of Sem to be spread vpon the Mountaines of Britaine, wherein God (according to his promife) perswaded vs who are of Japheth, to dwell.

(18) As hitherto we have fearched the first foundation of our Faith, fo neither want wee testimonies concerning the continuance of the same in this Land vnto following Posterities; although the injurie of Time and Warre have confumed many Records. For the Britainesthat were daily strengthned in their receiued faith, by the Doctrine of many learned and godly men, left not their first loue with the Church of Ephefus, but rather tooke hold of their skirts, as the Prophet speaketh, untill the tortures of Martyrdome cut them off by death: And those Fathers even from the Disciples themselves, held a succession in Dottrine (notwithstanding some repugnancie was made by Redulph Wiger. the Pagans) and preached the Goffell with good fuc- zeland ceffe, even till the same at length went forth with a bolder countenance, by the fauourable Edicts of A- Eufeble 4c. drian, Antonius Pius, and Marcus Aurelius Emperors of Rome(as Eufebius hath noted:) and in Britaine was established by the authoritie of Lucius their King whereby this was the first of all the Prouinces (faith Marcus Sabellicus) that received the Faith by publike ordinance: Of the teachers of those times Bale

Sicut erat celebris cultu numero ja Deorum Cum I ouis imperium staret Britannica tellus : Sicubi terrestres caso descendit ad oras Expectata salue, patribus fuit inclyta sanctis. Qui Neptunicolum campos & Cambricarura, Coryneas g. casas, loca desolata, colebant.

As were the Britaines famous for their zeale To Gentle Gods, whiles fuch they did adore; So, when the Heavins to Earth did Trush reveale, Bleff'd was that Land with Truth and Learnings flore: Whence British Plaines, and Cambri'as desert ground, And Cornewalls Crags, with glorious Saints abound.

In which number were Eluanus & Meduinus; those two learned Dinines, which were fent by King Lucius vnto Eleutherim Bishop of Rome, with whom retur-Bahop of Rame. ned two other famous Clerkes, whose names were Aly Fagains vel Faganus and Damianus; these together, both preached and baptized amongst the Britaines, whereby many dailie were drawne to the Faith: And, as a worthy and ancient * Historian saith: The Temples which had beene founded to the Honour of their many Gods, were nufcript in the Kings Libratie, ad An. 178. then dedicated to the one and onely true God : For there were in Britaine eight and twentie Flamins, and three were in Distance again and treense riamins, and times Arth-flamins, in flead of which, so many Bishops and Arch-bishops were appointed: worder the Archbishop of London were the Provinces of Loegria and Cornubia: winder Yorke, Deira, and Albania: winder Vrbs Legionum, Cambria: By which meanes, this kappy Kingdome vn-der that gody King, was nobly beautified with so many Cathedrall Churches, and Christian Bishops Sees, before any other kingdome of the world.

That this Lucius should be the Apostle to the Baua-King Zucins the Apostle to the rians, or that his fifter Emerita was crowned with the flames of Martyrdome fifteene yeares after his death, Acgidius Sendus Heaue to the credit of Aegidius Scudus, and Hermade Prifca Rhatia. Hermanna Schenus Sthedelius the reporters, and to the best liking of the readers. But most certaineit is, that the Christian faith was still professed in this sland, sound and undefiled, as Beda witneffeth, notwithftanding the cruel perfecutions of the bloody Emperours.

19 For, all this time (faith the faid Dicetus) Christian Religió flourished quietly in Britanny, til in Dioclefians time, their Churches were demolished, their holy Bibles cast into Bone-fires, the Priests with their faithfull flocke bloodily murdered. In which number, about the yeare two hundred ninetic three, as we read (in Beda, Malmesburie, Randulphus, and others) Albane with his teacher Amphibalus were both of them martyred for the profession of the Gospell at the old Towne Verolanium: as also in Leicester, those two Noble Citizens, Aaron, and Inlint, with multitudes both of men and women in fundric places (faith Beda) as flortly after no leffe then a Thousand Saints suffered death at Liechfield, wherupon the place was called another Golgotha, or field of blood: In memorie whereof, the Citie beareth for Armes to this day, in an Efchuenem of Landskip, fundry persons diversly Martyred. And yet after these times also the Britaines continued constant in Christianity, and the censures of their Bishops (for the great estimation of their Constancie, pietie, and learning) required, and approved in great points of Dollrine among the affemblies of iome Generall Councels; as that of Sardis and Nice, in the time of great Conflantine (the first Christian Emperour, and this our Country man, whose bleffed daies gaue freeway to that Profession, to the Councels Authoritie, and to the whole world Peace) had wee our Bishops present; whose forwardnes against the Arrian Herefie , afterwards Athanafius advanceth in his Apology vnto Iouinian the Emperor, among three hundred Bishops affembled at the Councell of Sardice, in Anno yeare three hundred fiftie nine, and in the raigne of Constantius, who caused soure hundred westerne Bi-Thops to be there formoned in fauour of the Arrians. whereof three were out of Britaine, (as Sulpitius Senerus the good Bishop of Burges hath reported) that w.z. gaue their suffrages against that Heresie. These doth Hilarie tearme the Bishops of the Prouinces of Britaine, by whom they were somewhat derided, because himps. beeing farre from their owne Countrie they lived vponthe Emperours charge. And Beda testifieth, that from Dioclesians time they both reedified their former Temples, and founded new also in memorie of their then fresh-bleeding Martyrs, and enjoyed a generall and ioifull peace in their religious profession; till that Arrian Heresse having first filled the Continent, fought and found passage ouer the Seas into our Chryfanthus likewise is recorded by Niepberm in Ecbeene a Confular Deputie in Italie vnder Theodofius, and made Lieutenant of Britaine, where with great praise he managed the common wealth, was against his will afterward made Bishop at Constantinople of the Nonaatterward made Dunopa to onstruction processes that called themselves Cathars, that is, pure, making a schime in the Chareb by their denial of Saluation, to such as fell into relapse of sinne after Baptisme once received. This is that Bishop of whom we read, that of all his Ecclesiasticall reuenewes hereserved only for himselfe two loaues of bread vpon the Lords day. And in the first Tome of Councels is mention of Restitutus Bishop of London; whom (because that, as is most probable. Christian Religion had in those primitive times taken more firme footing in Britain then in France) the French Bissops called to their Nationall Councell, the fecond at Arles, in Anno three hundred thirty fiue, that he might with his Suffrage ap-prooue their Decrees. About the yeere foure hundred feuenty, was a Provincial Councell held in Britaine for Icucurty, was a resumctau connect netts in Britaine tor the reforming of Religion, and repairing of the ruined Churches, which the Pagan mariage of Fortiger had decated, to the great griefe and discontent of the people, a pregnant figne of the continuing zeale, which vnto thole daies had left a glorious memorie.

(20) And the Enfigne of Arthur, wherein the Aubur Enfigne Virgin with her some in her armes (as is noted by Vincentius) was portraied, so often displaied for Christ, and his Countries libertie, against the Pagan Saxons, Is as a seale to confirme vs of their Profession, and doth shew the badge of that ages Christianitie. But the fafinew the badge of the a tages Confilamate. But the ta-mous Monasteric of Banelro, as a College of distince Pla-lofophers, and by Clarinather and year of the American distributed into fewers in the world, and her Monkes distributed into fewers in the world, and her Monkes bring three hands of the configuration of the configuration of bring three hands of the configuration of the configuration of his distributed into the configuration of the configuration of the transfer of the configuration of the configuration of the configuration of the transfer of the configuration of the configuration of the configuration of the transfer of the configuration of t by their daily labours, doth notably witnesse to all Bed.tis. Eulef.l. by their daily amounts, doin morably with the to an Beath, fucceeding ages, that Christian Religion was then both planted and preached in this Iland. And in the Synod held at Austins Oake were seven old Britaine Bishops, belides other Dollours, who met with that Romane Legate, and not in points of doctrine, but rather in Legate, and not my points or acception, but futner in their leucral irist and ecrominist did autie, by any thing that in that Alfemblie appeared. For as it is most undoubleed, that (if we lipechae property) lerafa-lem is the Mother of vs.all, and of all Chuncher, and our Bestimans. former allegations doe cuince, that the first Planta-tion of the British Faith was altogether by Iewes and others of the Easterne Church : so the very rites of this Religious College of Banchor do cuidently proue, that their first institution in Religion came from the East, Beda shewing that in all of them they differred from the Romane Church; yea, and that they neuer did, northen would acknowledge any authoritie of the Bishop of Rome ouer them in matters of the Church and ferwice of God. All which accordeth right well with that before cited out of Zachary that the waters of life should issue from Ierusalem. And S. Hierome, who spake most

CHRISTIAN RELIGION IN BRITAINE.

King Lucius, from whose time vnto the entrance of this Austin the Monke, foure hundred thirty eight yecres were expired : in all which space we have seene that the Christian Faith was both taught and embraced in this tland, notwithstanding the continual persecutions of the Romans, Huns, Picts, and Saxons: which last made such desolations in the outward face of the Church, that they droue the Christian Bishops into the deserts of Cornwall and Wales. In which number were Theomis and Thadioceus Bishops of London and Yorke, chusing rather to suffer adversitie with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleafures of finne for a feafon. By whose labours the Gospell was plentifully propagated among those vast mountaines, and those parts especially aboue all other made very glorious, by the multitudes of their holy Saints and learned Tra-

(21) Lastly, (for the close of all) that these testi monies are fincerely by vs produced, for the first preaching and planting of the Gospell, and by such meanes and men as we have declared, and particularlie by Iofeph of Arimathea and his affociates, the con-fent of all Writers, both forraine and home-bred, doth sufficiently approvae: and the reucrend regard had of the place, with the many Charters thereof to this day remaining, are strong inducements for those our first Apostles Residencies and Burials : whereof one exemplified under the Seale of King Edward the third, is to be seene at this day, reciting that the Abbey of Glastenburie being burned in the time of King Henrie the second while it was in his hands, at the request of the Patriark of Jerufalem (then prefent in England) in-fligated further both by the Biftons and Nobilitie, hee did reedifie the fame, causing diligent search to bee made for the ancient Charters of that foundation, and among many recited in that exemplification, in one of them it is called, Origo Religionis in Anglia : in another, Tumulum Sanctorum, ab ipsis discipulis Domini adi-ficatum, fuisse venerabilem. Also in the same Charter amongst many other Kings, there is mention made of King Arthur, to be a great Benefactor unto that Abbey; whose Armes upon the stone walles, both in the Chapell (called S. Iofeph) and in divers other places of the Abbey, are cut: which is an Efchichem, whereon a Croffe with the Pirgin Mary in the first quarter is set, and is yet to this day remaining ouer the Gate of entrance, and is held to be also the Armes of that Abber. This place is faid to have been given to Iofeph and his brethren, by Aruiragus then King of Britaine : and from hence were those two divine Doctors sent to Elutherius by King Lucius, as by their Epithetes doth appeare: the one of them called Eluanus Aualonius, or

of Glastenburie; and the other, Meduninus of Belga, that is, Welles, neere vnto this place. And to these perfons and place, Polydore Virgil, that dwelled among vs, and had perused most of our Antiquities, ascribeth the originall and precedencie of our Christian Faith, in these words: Hac omnia Christiana pietatis in Britannia

This Iland then, in this thing made happy before the most, the Inhabitants became Instructors of others, and in their earthly vessels bare this heavenly liquor, which thorow their golden Conduits ran into many other Countries, and filled their Cesternes with this water of life. For from hence was Netherland converted to Christianitie, as testifieth the story of Swithbertus: Burgundie by our Columbanus, saith Sigebert : Scotland by Brandanus, as Bernard the French Monke affirmeth : Swedia by Bernard. Gallus, as faith Petrus de Natalibus: and Frisia by Wilfred, as is recorded by Beda and Matthew of Westminster: the Franconians, Hessians, and Thuringians, by Winnfred our Deuonshire man : the Normegians by Nicolas Brekspere of Middlesex: and the Lithuanians by Thomas Walden of Effex. Againe, if we shall cast our eie on all the Reformed Churches in Christendome, and with them on Luther, Husse, and Prage, they will all confesse, they first deriued their light from the learned Wickleffe of Oxford; the Lampe of whose sacred knowledge hath illumined not onely all the corners of this Kingdom but also all those forraine States, whom it hath pleased God to deliuer from the thraldome and vengeance of Babylon : so that with the German Poet, to Gods glorie and Britaines praife, the English thus may fing :

O acceptable was the fall of this Prince, and fuch hopes reuiued at the entrance of his Succe Jour, as that all mens mindes were raifed to an expectation, that the glorie of the Empire, so much Eclipsed through the ciuill broiles of Galba, Otho, and this last

His originall. Sustem, in vis. Velpaf-fell.t.

(2) His descent was from the Flautan family, and that but base and obscure : his Father called Titus flat but bate and concine: his Fauter cance 11100 Flating, his Mother Polla Vespassa, his Wife Domilia, and his Sonnes Titue, and Domitian, both Emperours succeeding after him. (3) In his yong yeares, hee serued as a Militarie

Tribune in the Countrey of Thracia, and as Questor in the Provinces of Crete, and Cyrene: Vnder Claudiu the Emperour, he went forth into Germanie, as Lieutenant of a Band, and from thence was fent into Britannie, to be Leader of the second Legion, where the foundation of that greatnes whereunto after hee attained, was first laid: for as Suetonius hath written, therein with victorie hee fought thirty fet Battailes. and was also Conquerour of the Ile of Wight: whereby two mightie Nations were subdued to the Romanes, and twentie Townes wonne from the Britaines: for which exploits he had Triumphall ornaments, worthily assigned him by Claudius, whose owne Triumph, as Iosephus faith) was gotten without his paines, but by in the only prowelle of Vefpafian. After this, he gouer-ned Africke with fingular integritie and much, ho nour, and was laftly fent by Neve for his Vice-roy into Syria vpon this occasion.

(4) There had beene spread thorow all the East-(4) There had been expressed thorow all the Esp-parts, and of Prophecie and cited opinion conflantly be-leened, that it was appointed by the Definies, there foodld come out of Turic him that flould be Lord of the

This Nation was so populous and strong, that none was thought fitter to stay their and irrong, that hone was thought little to hay their attempts, then was  espainar, who with great honour and approbation, reduced that Province vnto their former subjection, and there remained the short time proceedings there Iosephus writeth at large, vnto whom I must referre the vnsatisfied Reader.

(5) All which times, the civill stirres amongst the Romanes , gaue the Provinces occasion to attempt their former liberties; as did the Batauians, Germanes and French, with whom the Britaines also tooke hart to reuolt: Burthe first that sided with Vespasian, were two thousand expert Souldiers, drawne out of the Mesian Legions, and sent to aide Otho against Vitelhe giant Legions, and sent to and once against vice-lius; who marching as faire as Aquileia, they heard there of the certaine death of othe, and thereupon taking the aduantage of the offred opportunitie, with an uncontrolled libertie, committed many robberies and outragious villanies: In fo much, that fearing condigne punishment, they held it their best policie, to combine some speciall man by their fauours vnto them, whereby their facts might bee either quite smoothered, or lightly reprehended; neither in their opinions was any so gracious for desert or power, as was Velpasian, and therefore with one affent they proclaimed him Emperour, and wrote his name in their Banners, thinking themselues as worthy to make an Emperour, as were the Legionseither of Spaine, or Ger-

But most especially the short Raignes of these last Emperours (whose Beginnings were alto-gether imploied to satisfie their licentious pleasures, and latter times spent for the defense of their Lines from violent Deaths) gaue way to many imperfections of the Gouernors, and mildemeanours of the common Souldiers. (10) After whose government (no further Acts being mentioned) Iulius Agricola, who in Rome had beene Questor, Tribune, and Preter, and Lieutenant in Aquitania, was sent Generall into Britaine by Velpasian the Emperour, the yeere before his death. This man formerly had there ferued under the command of Petilius Cerealis, whereby hee had gained experience both of the People and Province ; and at his first approch gathered the Ensignes of the Legions, and other aids of the Auxiliaries, (who for that yeere attended an end of their trauels, because the Summer was almost spent) lest by protracting time, the violence of the Ordonices should further burst foorth, who a little before his entrance, had vtterly almost cut off a wing which lay on their Borders, the rest of the Countrey, as men defirous of Warre, allowing their example.

Against these Agricola addressed, who kept them-selves in places of aduantage, and durst not descend into indifferent ground. Hee therefore being himfelfe formoft, lead up his Armie to their encountere and feeonded with the courage of his trained Souldiers, put them all to fword and flight, whereby the whole Nation was almost quite deftroied.

(11) And now that his fame began to afcend, he knew well that with instance it must be followed, and as the first affaires had iffue, the rest would succeede; he therefore deliberated to conquer the Iland Mona, from the possession whereof Paulinus Suetonius was reuoked, by the generall Rebellion vnder Boduo. But in a purpose not purposed before, and ships wanting, the policie of the Captaine deuised a passage; for hee commanded the most choice of the Aids, to whom the shallowes were well knowen (and without whom the Romans did almost attempt nothing) to put ouer at once, and fuddenly to invade them. These Britaines, after the vie of their Countrey manner, were most skilfull swimmers, and in swimming armed, able to gouerne themselues and horses. The wenams thinking themselues secure, for that no Ships were feene in their River, now thus fuddenly furprized, as men amazed, firmly thought that nothing could bee inuincible to them, who came with such resolutions to Warre, and therefore they humbly defired Peace, and yeelded the Ilandvnto Agricolaes devotion.

(12) Who now in these prosperous proceedings of his fortunes, fought not with any glorious relation or letters of aducrtiscments, to improoue and dug ment the greatnesse of his honour; but rather in seeking to suppresse his fame, made it shine more bright; and addressing himselfe for civill govern-ment, reformed many abuses in his House, his Campe, and in the whole Prounte, and those especially that most touched the poorer fort, as by moderating the increase of Tribute and Corne, wherewith the Britains were daily burdened : by the suppressing of which enormities (and the like) an honourable opinion of him was cuery where entertained, and a generall inclination vnto Peace, which partly by the negligence, partly by the auarice of former Gone, nours, had beene no leffe feared then Warre it felfe.

(13) And whereas the Britaines hitherto fill harried with Oppressions and Warres, had little leifure or will to apply themselves to things which accompany Peace, and are the ornaments of Ciuil and fettled Serieties, and therefore were prone vpon enery occasion to reuolt and stirre : to induce them by pleasures to quietnesse and rest, he exhorted them in private, and helpt them in publike, to build Temples, Houses, and Places of Affemblies, and common refort; and likewife provided that the formes of their Nobles should be in-structed in the liberall Arts and Sciences, commending the industrie, and preferring the wits of the Britaines before the Students of France, as being now growen curious to attaine the Eloquence of the Ro- The Britainer man Gentrie, (yea cuen the Gowne, the habit of peace and civilized: peaceable Arts) and to delight in gorgeous Buildings,

Banquets, and Baths. (14) And thus farre had Agricola proceeded before the death of Pelpalian, whose managing of the Imperiall dignitie was cuery way answerable to so high a place, and whose death was as much lamented, as his Vertues did furmount his Predecessours. But as tou-Vertues did firmount his Predecessors. But as tou-ching his miraculous cures of the Blind and the Lame, as the limite and the lame, and the lame, and the lame, and the lame, and our present Historie; so yet may they conuince the indurate Atheift, whose conscience is seared with the finne of incredulitie of the Miracles wrought by our bleffed Sautour Iefus Christ. For if the wifest Historians of those times have beleeved themselves, and left Records vpon their credit to following posterities; that by his touch onely hee cured a Lame-man, and with his Tack hiff 4.0.35 spittle opened the eies of the Blinde, being a mortall and finfull man ; shall it then bee doubted; that hee which knew no finne, neither receided the gift by meafure, either in power could not, or in act did not worke fuch Miratles as were the witnesses of his Godhead, and for fuch are recorded to confirme our faith?

But to our purpose. (15) When Veftaffan had lived threescore and nine yeeres; feuen moneths, and feuen daies, and had Vefrefen dieth nine yeeres, ieuen monerns, and ieuen daies, and mad raigned ten yeeres, as Eufebius faith, he died peaceably in his Bed; which no Emperour fince Augustus ever did, 40.3.14.13.0013 having beene a great Scourge and Instrument of God against the miserable Jewes; whose kingly race from Dataids line he lought by all meanes to extirpate, that of God against fo all their hopes and expectations might for ever be the tens.

Hee was of a middle stature, well set, and Hisendownson frongly compact: his countenance not altogether amiable, neither any wates deformed: a great fatoster of Learning, very Liberall, a luft, Wife, and Most Valitations, which was the counter of the counte ant Prince. TITVS

Of this his victorie ouer the Iewes, hee left the remembrance to posteritic by stamping upon the reuerse of his coines IVD. CAP, with pictures expressing his Triumph and the Iewes ouerthrow, which in the front of this Chapter we have also placed.

(4) Somewhat he was blemished with the love of Berenice, the beautifull Queene of Jewrie, and much more with the murther of Aulus Cinna, only through ealousie conceiued of her : and whether that was the finne whereof at his death he repented, is vincertain when lifting up his eies to Heasen, hee complained why his Life should be taken from him, that excepting one offence descrued not to die. As himselfe in glorie wielded the Emperiall Scepter, so did his Substitutes gouerne the Provinces; at which time in Britaine, Agricola was President, and therein had spent almost two yeares under the raigne of Vespasian, in fuch maner as wee haue declared.

(5) In his third yeare, he discouered new Countries, and parts of this Handyet vntouched, or at least-wise not thoroughly subdued, as altogether vnsaints of that which was gotten, & sought to draw the conof that which was goiten, octought to that the con-fines of the Empire with a larger compaffe: therefore marching Northward to the Frith of * Tans, wasted all as he went, and without any relistance fortified the is thought. places with Caffles and Bulwarkes, which hee stored with fufficient prouision; where eueric Garrifon winwith unicent proutions where everify a win-tring, garded it felfe, and with the Summers feruice, uer repaired the Winters events, whereby evermore the Enemie went to the worfe, and his delignes profpered as himfelfe wished.

(6) The fourth Summer was spent in perusing and ordering that which he had ouer-runne. And if the glory of the Romane name could have permitted, or so beene satisfied, it needed not to have sought other limits of Britaine : for ' Glota and ' Bodotria, two ther limits of Britaine: for Gueta and Boauria, two armes of two oppoints Seas, shooting farre into the Land, and onely divided afunder by a narrow partition of ground, the same was both garded and fortified with Castles and Garrisons: so that the Romanes were absolute Lords of all the South-side, and had cast the

Enemie as it were into another Iland. (7) In this state stood this Province of Britaine at the death of Titus, whose short raign hath left no long matters of discourse, and his Acts greater under other Emperours, then when he was Emperour himselse; yet that little time wherein he gouerned, was with Inflice, Liberalitie and Love of all. Hee very speedily apprehended the hope of an Empire, for no fooner was his Father made Emperour, but that hee affumed the name of Cafar, and in Rome caried himselfe with such prodigalitie, and so liberally made promifcs of the Imperial Offices, that his father hearing thereof, faid, he maruelled why his some sent not one to thereot, lade, or marketea way not some ent not one to fuecced him in his place. (1) His first entrance into state and dignitie was neither greatly applauded nor gainfaid, hee feeming to carrie an equal mixture, and his vertues to hold le-uell with his vice. But Ambition now supported with Soueraignty, did quickly fet the scale onely for the worse side. The affaires of the Empire hee altogether neglected; and impatient of labour, or affection to Armes, daily retired into a private chamber or Gallery, wherein hee viually applied himselfe onely to catch Flies, and with the point of a bodkin to pricke them thorow: whereupon one being asked what company was with the Emperour, replied, Not so much as a flie. whereas now a true and imperiall victorie of so many thousand enemies subdued and slaine, was currant and famous in cuery mans mouth: as being indeed a thing dangerous, that a prinate mans name should be exalted aboue his Prince. In vaine then had hee suppressed the studie of Oratorie, and other worthy politicke Arts, thereby to keepe downe other mens reputation, if he should in Military glory be diffeiled by another. And to be a good Commander of an Army, was to be aboue private estate, that being a Vertue peculiar for a Prince, and therefore not lightly to be paffed ouer. With these and the like incentiues his minde was tormented; yet thought he it best to dissemble his malice, vntill the heat of his glory, and loue of his fouldiers were fomewhat abated. of theirs upon them, wherewith they were both galled and fore wounded. Agricola feeing his men thus ftoutly relifted, tooke another course: for, spying the aduantage, he commanded three * Batauian Cohorts, and two of the b Tungrians, to presse forward, and bring the matter to handy strokes and dint of sword, athing which (in respect of their long service) they were very expert in, but contrariwise to the Britaines very prejudiciall, by reason of their little Bucklers, and huge fwords, being blunt pointed, and no waies fit for the close in fight. This command advantaged the Romans much ; for these with the pikes of their Bucklers, when they came to deale blowes, so mangled the faces of the Britaines, that they were not able to stand before them; and the rest, gathering courage vpon emulation of these, ascended the hill, bearing downeall that was in their way, fo that many halfe dead, and some wholly vntouched, were ouer-passed and left for hafte of winning the field. In the meane while the Chariots mingled themselues with the battle of footmen, and the troopes of horsemen began for to flie: who albeit they had lately terrified others were now diffressed themselves, by the vneuennesse of the ground, and thicke rankes of the enemy, and were forced to fight standing still, and by the maine weight of horses to beare downe one another The wandring Wagons also, and masterlesse horses, as chance or feare did guide them, ouer-bare many times their friends, and thwarted their way that me

Articus, Captaine of a Cohort, who vpon a youthfull hear, and fiercenesse of his horse, was carried amidst his enemies. Of the Britains fell ten thousand, and their designes so deseated and broken, that as desperatemen, they for sake their houfes, and in despight set fire on them themselves : the hurt persons they carrie and draw with them, and call them that are unhurt, hoping to be relected by them. One while they chuse out holes to lurke in, for their liues fafetie; eftfoones in great hafte forfake them, as doubting therein their owne securitie. Dispersed afunder, they lament, and attend death: affembled together, expostulate of their meanes and life : one while conceining a glimmering of some small hope, another while deiected with vtter despaire : Sometimes at the fight of their dearest beloued, mooned to pitie; but much oftner stirred to rage, for reuenge and many of them, euen by way of compassion, slew their dearest Wines and Children, to rid them from their future miseries.

But after the death of Domitian died many Records, and the Provinces proceedings (especially those that most concerne Britaine) lest vncertaine; and therefore are neither with the like largenesse prosecuted, nor with the like authoritie auouched. And were it not that these Romane Emperours succeeding, did onely continue the succession of our British Monarchs, many of them might be quite omitted, as neither themselves, nor deputies, allies, or enemies once spoken of concerning our affaires, and the Gouernement of this Proumce, during those times so maimed and defectine (in respect of any warrantable relations) that hardly a method can bee observed to the fitting of a continuall Historie. (6) How filent soeuer writers haue beene for this Emperours affaires in this our Iland, yet it is to be thought that vnto this, as wel as vnto other Provinces, both Propretors, Lieutenants, Presidents, Pretors, and Doth represent, Leutenants, Prefacents, Prefers, and Preconful were fent, and euery Citie to haue their municipall Magistrates. The Pretor that yearely proclaimed solemne Sessions, wherin himself sate aloft you a high tribunall seate, and guarded with his listors a-bout him in great estate, did execute his authoritie throughout his owne iurisdiction, and determined all causes brought before him, where rods and axes were prepared for the common people, that were enforced to receive a new Ruler everie yeare. And furely as this yoke of bondage was grieuoully borne of enery Pronince, vpon whose necke, it was imposed & laid: So the Britaines underwent the weight of that subjection with such vnwillingnes, that in the time of this Traian, they revolted and rebelled, though prefently suppressed, as it is cuident out of Spartianus.

(7) The care that this good Emperous had for the weale of his Subiects is projected by his projidence in making waies paffageable from place to place, whereof remaine many testimonies by those his Caufeies drawne with wonderfull diligence, euen thorow the whole Iland, which now, though difmembred and cut in pecces by the Countrie people, wherethorow they passed, yet doe many remnants thereof

remaine, especially in pastures, or by-grounds out of the rode way, with bankes so high, that euidently they shew themselues. Of these Causeies Gallen writeth they inew tenements. Ext vnto whom fucceeded Antoninus, (for his many vertues) furnamed the Pious : and by the Senate, Father of his Countrey. This man did not onely equall his Adopter and Predeceffours, in wisdome and other princely qualities, but was also compared, for his peace and policie, vnto Numa Pompilius the lecond King of Rome, who for his renowned government, is so famously in their Histories recorded. His ment, is to tamouny in their Finiones reconce. First birth was in Lombardy, the fon of Aurelius Fulaius, and Nephew to Titus Aurelius Fulaius, that had beene Conful, and held other Offices of dignity and State. The whole time of whole Raigne was fo spent in peace, that small remembrances remaine of any martiall affaires:yet fuch as we finde in Britannie we will deliner.

(2) At his first entrance into the Empire, about the yeere of Christ, One hundred thirtie nine (as appeareth by the money minted in memorie of the reduction of Britaine) the Northerne Britaines in that part of this Ile beganto flirre, and made inroads into the Province, notwithstanding the Rampire or Wall that Adrian had made. Against whom Lollius V rbicus Lieutenant heere under Antoninus, brought his power, and with some skirmishes put them backe : taking from the Brigantes part of their Land, as a Mulf, for the walfet they had done to the Genomians, a Province adioining vnto the Brigantes, whose people had put themseluses under the Emperous protection. Which done, he repaired the Wall with stronger Fortifications; or (which is more probable) raifed vp another not farre from the same, to double the defense: for (saith Inlieu Capitolinus) Lollius the Legate to Antoninus oner-comming the Britaines, built another surfe Wall to diside the Prosince, and to impeach the incursions of the barba-rous. Notwithstanding the honour of this service (as is testified by the ancient Panegyricke) was (by one Fronto) attributed wholly to Antoninus the Embe-

Fronto) actionated whenly to Anionnum the Emperior himlesse; who, although absent and in his Palace at Rome, yet stituting as it were at the Helme of a Ship, did command and direct the enterprise, and therefore had right to the glory thereof. This Wallasso (as M. Clarenceaux coniectureth, having feene it so tracted in an ancient Chorographicall Chart) was drawen from the River Tine vnto Carleill-but Time and Warre have vorne it now away.

(3) In the meane while a new infurrection was indled among the Brigantes, that annoied some of the Romane Confederars. But by the diferetion of the Generall, it was quenched before it came to flame : for pon the first rumour of the Reuolt, Lollius marched thither with part of his Armie, commanding Seises

Saturnius, Admirall of the British Fleet, to waffe vpon the North of the Iland, both to defend the Coast from danger, and also vpon occasions to further the Landferuice, if need were: by which meanes, the Brigante. were easily reduced to obedience, euen by the prefence onely of the Lieutenant, who for his good seruice done in Britaine, during the short time of his imploiment there, obtained the furname Britannicus. This may by the first figure in the face of this Chapter (being in the third Confulfhip of this Emperour) be coniectured to have hapned in the yeere of Christ one hundred forty one; and by inscription of the last Coine in that ranke it is manifelt that there was some other expedition against Britaine the yeere following.

(4) I cannot omit, though not directly pertinent (4) Teannor omit, mough nor ancesty present to our purpose, the care that this good Emptrous get actioner plan is considered of the difference and perfect the constitution of the Chestian. ans (who no doubt by his bounty enjoied much tranquillitie heere in Britaine also) in whose desense hee wrote to his Deputies in Asia, and published an Edict against their Accusers, the effect whereof (from Eu-

I doubt not but the Gods themselues have a care that wicked persons " shall bee brought to light : for it much more doth appertaine vnto them, then it doth vnto you, to punish such as refuse to yeeld them worship. But this course which you take doth confirme them whom you perfecute, in this their opinion of you, that you are impious men, and meere Atheifts; "whereby it commeth to paffe, that they defire in the quarrell of their God rather to die, then to yeeld to the wils of fuch as you are, and to embrace your forme of Religion. Let it not seeme vnseasonable to call to your remembrance the Earth quakes, which lately happened, and which yet are to your great terrour and griefe; because I understand that in fuch like accidents you cast the enuy of such, common misfortunes vpon their (boulders, whereby their confidence and truft in their God is much the more increased: whereas you being still ignorant of the true causes of such things, doe both neglect the worship of the other Gods, and also banish and perfecute the service of the Immortall God, whom the "Christians doe worship, and you persecute to the "death all the embracers of that Profesion. In the behalfe of these men many of the Provincial Presidents have written before vnto our Father of famous memory: to whom he answered, that they should not bee molested, vnlesse they were proued to haue practifed Treason against the Emperiall State: and

In fine, this large Euloge and praise is faftened on him, that neither in his youth he did anie thing rafhly, nor in his age any thing negligently: In which honourable course, having raigned twentie and two yeares, (some say twentie three) seuen moneths, and twentie fixe daies, he died of a feuer at Lorium the feuenth of March, the yeare of his life feuentie fiue, and of Christ one hundred fixtie two.

So also Lucius Verus, (whom this excellent Emperour had in the yeere 162, as appeareth by his Coine of Concord, fet in the entrance of his life, elected his College in the Empire) to supply the defect of merit in himselfe, tooke from the Conquest of Auidius Cassius, and other his Captaines in Armenia, Parthis and Media, the Trophies of their victories, with which he filled up his Title, and adorned his Money, expressed in the beginning of this Chapter.

(6) About these times, albeit other things went not so happily with Britaine as might have beene wished, yet one felicitie then befell her, which did both counternaile her owne calamities, and ouerpoize the good fortunes of all other Nations: and that was the bleffed rest of the Gospell of peace in this warring and vnpeaceable Kingdome, a great part thereof being gouerned at that time by King Lucius, furnamed Leuer-Maur. For that was the policie and ancient custome of the Romans (as Tacitus saith) to viceuen Kingsthemselues for their instruments, to bring the people into bondage. And Antoninus Pius ending warre, permitted Kingdomes to be gouerned by their owne Kings, and Provinces by their owne Comites (as faith Capitolinus.) This King difliking the Paganisme and Idolatry of his people, (though, as wee haue shewed, among many of them the truth of Christs Doctrine was both taught and embraced, euen from the first planting thereof) and being incited both by the exemplary life and piety of the Christians, and also by the manifest miracles wrought amongst them, and encouraged moreouer by the fauourable Edicts of the Emperours in their behalfe, and by the good affections and forwardnesse of their Deputies heere, Trebellus and Pertinax; he gaue leaue to their Religion by publike warrant, and was the first Chrifian King in the world, and Britaine the first Prouince that embraced the Goffell by publike authority, as Sa-

Pope Elcutherius thus wrote to Lucius King of Britannic, for the reformation of the King and the Nobilitie of the Kingdome of Britaine: Ion defired visto fend onto you the Romane and Imperial Lawes, which you would vfe in your Kingdome of Britannie. (9.) The date of this Epifle (as by some other Copies it appeareth) being the yeare of the fecond Confulfity of Commodus and Vespronius, may give great light and fatisfaction to fuch as are curious to know the truth, and to reconcile the differences of our Hiforians, touching the time: That Confulfing being a-bout the yeare of Christ one hundred and cighty: which was at the beginning (if not a little before) of Commodus his raigne; and therefore whereas fome refer it to the one hundred fixty ninth veer after Christs Passion, it is apparant to be the only error of transcribers, who so writ in stead of one hundred seuenty nine after his birth; which was, anno currente, the very time of Commodus being Conful the second time: and on this yeere agree, both forrain and domestick writers of this matter. And albeit the very texture of this Epiflle, carieth with it the true Character of Antiquity, yet because our worthy writers, mentioning this Epiftle, are charged of flat forgery (by fuch who challenge to be Malters in all ancient knowledge) we will adde somewhat, to wash off those false aspersions, both from the Record, and from the mentioners

Their first exception is, that the Latin Copy would doubtlesse have been produced by them, if it had not beene counterfeit. Whereto what need we answer, fith now we have produced it, and can produce as many, as there are Copies of King William the Conquerors Lawes, wherein it is expresly repeated? The next is, that the English translations of it differ each from other. A reason more childish then the former, sith enery man hath a scuerall conceit of that he translateth, and fornetimes the very Originalls, (by transcribers ignorance or omission) cause variety of translation, as may appeare in the varia lectiones of this Copy prefixed. The laft, but most faucy and ignorant exception is, that the places of Striptures mentioned in the letter, are fo | Parjen und fostifbly and fenfelefly applied, as is vnworthy to be fathered on the learned Eleutherius. Let vs therefore in word, bring the divinity of this Grand-censurer to the touchflone: For Eleutherius proueth, first, that Kings are Gods Vicars in their kingdome, becaufe the whole Earth is properly Gods, and therefore Kings have it not as their owne, but as his Lieutenants: Next, that as Dauid typically, and Christ impliedly, was by God annointed King, for the execution of Righteonfreffe and Taffice, fo enery gody King ought to make that the on-ly end of his high bonor, that being by God advanced, he might like wife advance Righteonfors, ruffice, and the service of God, whose vasfall he is and that therefore Gods sudgements and Lawes, are to be preferred by them, before all humane Lawes: with which they (bould rule and cherish their gody subjects as their children; and protect them and gather them under one faith as Christ their master)doth, who therefore compareth himselfe, to a Hen gathering her Chickens under her wings.

cations, as if the learnedit fathers on these places be duly examined, they will be found no whit to exceed the apprehensions of this Godly Bifthop. But if Robert Comback, would have cast his eie on the moderne Popes, and their Cardinals applications of Scrip-tures, what would he then fay? God made a greater light and a leffe: therefore the Pope is as much greater then the Emperor, as the Sunne is bigger then the Moone. Christ faid to Peter, Kill and eat: therefore the Pope may excommunicate and depose Kings (yea and kill them too for a need.) Peter said, Behold two swords; therefore the Pope hath both Temporall and Spiritual Iurisdiction over the world. So God laid to Ierem, he should plant and transplant : therefore the Pope may dispose and and transplane: therefore the rope may appea and transplane at this pleasure. Christ to Peter, thom art Cophas, and Cophas is a head; therefore the but ill source their turns.

Pope is head of the Church. Domini sunt Cardines Terra. The earth is the Lords : therefore the Cardinals are the Lords of the Earth. On fuch pillers and applications of Scriptures, is the whole Papall greatnesse founded, and yet these late Seribes can scotlingly capill at the godly applications of ancient Eleutherius. But to our

(2) At first a Schoole-master, and taught the Grammar; next a Ciuil-Lawyer, and pleaded causes in Courts; and lastly, a Martial-man, and scrued in Campe: where Fortune attended him with fuch fauourable fucceffe, that within fine daies, out of the ranck of a common Souldierhe was preferred to bee Captaine of a Cohort, in the Syrian warres against the Parthians, which ended, he was imploied into Britannie Missa, and Germany, and also had charge in chiefe of a Fleete vpon the Flemmish Seas: he served likewise in Dacia, with such honourable proofe of his valour, as that wife Emperour Marcus Aurelius held him in high esteeme, and afterward made him Senator of Rome. Then was hee assigned Gouernour of all Syria and Affa, the greatest place of Credit and reputation that might be; and from thence fent againe in-

into Britaine, chosen out as the principall man, of note for to stay the Commotions there raised against Commodus, where in the Field he was left for dead : but thence also returning after hee had gouerned foure fenerall Confular Provinces, was created Proconfull of Africa, and immediately after Prafett of Rome. Neither yet made he his stand there, (though the greatest of any subjective degree) till hee had mounted the Throne of Maiesty, and had obtained the command ouer All : which fell to his lot by the death of Commodus ; and by the meanes of Martia, Elius Latus, and other Conspirers of his end.

(3) For the Murther being done in the dead of the night, Latus in great haste repaired to Pertinax his lodging; at whole fight the Old man in bed, expected nothing but Death, as supposing him sent from Commodus to no other end. But Latus salutes him by the vnexpected name of Emperour, carrying him with acclamations vnto the Army, and in the morning to the Senate, where, of them all with great Heleius Perinax morning to the Senate, where, of made Emperor. ioy, he was confirmed sugufus.

(4) His first businesse was to bridle the Licencious liues of the Pratorian Cohorts & injuries done by them vnto the Romane Citizens, which gained him such hatred, that it was cause of his death: For these men growne difordered and lawleffe in the raigne of Commodus, held themselues wronged, to be nowlocked vnder the constraint of Lawes civil Covernement ; and these only enuied the peace & prosperity of Pertinax, whereas all the Provinces abroad at the very hearing of his Election, and fame of his Imperiall vertues, laid aside their weapons, and disired to embrace peace with a Prince so nobly qualified.

(5) The first that confirred against his life, was one Falco; whom notwithstanding he freely forgaue, yet punished certaine Souldiers thereto accessary: whereupon, the rest assembling themselues in tumultuous and farious manner, with their drawn fwordsimuaded his Palace. Hee feeing their purposes fought no-feapes, but descending the Palace, met them in the base Court: At whose presence and Maichy they were much amazed, and a while made a stand: vnto whom with great gravity, and without flew of any

nerus hauing by this bloudy accident of the giddie multitude gained with more facility then he ex pected, the fatal feat of go uernment, it was his next in place to suppresse Pefins by force, and Albimus by falshood: whose

Actions & lines fince they hapned with this Emperor. and ended with his Aword, I will record together, be-ginning with Caius Pesceniss first, fince that he fell vnder the fortune of this man. This olde man in the

eere of Christ one hundred nincty foure, was clected Emperor by Acclamation of the Syrian Armie, of which (though begun but by a handfull in respect of all the other Emperiall forces)he had good hope, fince to the honor of that Goddesse he dedicated the first marke of his Soueraigntie, the minting of his mony.

A person he was of seemly stature, louely feature and faire skinne, except his Neck, which differing fo farre from the rest gaue him the sirname of Niger; his complexion was ruddy, his Body fat, his voice for piercing, that it would be heard a mile off: and his haire for more ornament long hee wore in reflected curies vpon his shoulders. A commendable souldier and well bearing himselfe in the military offices hee underwent. In his Lieutenancy abroad he was seuere, and at home he so well acted his part when hee was Conful, as in his Clemency and Justice hee seemed emulous of Pertinax. Thus all his life he enioted the goodnesse of his merit and fortune, and had not his ambition began, where his yeeres were ending, had so parted: For no sooner had hee put on the Robe Emperiall, but Seuerus descated his Armie at Cizicum, pursued him to Antioch, and tooke him at Euphrates, sending to Bizantium his head a Trophie of the Conquest, and to his wife, children, and followers (vnto whom at first this Victor granted banish. ment) in the end denied life,

(1) Now as soone as Senerus made his approch necr Rome, he gaue command that the Pretorian Cohorts should attend him disarmed; which done, he vehemently checkt them for their proditorious trechery against Pertinax, and pronouncing sentence, deprined them both of name, honor, and armes of Souldiers, and banished them from Rome, and the circuit thereof for one hundred miles distance : which act of his Zz 2

wonne him such reputation, that in Rome the whole Story of Pertinax his ruine, and Severus his afpiring to his Throne, was at large portraited in an excellent pecce of worke, of folide molten braffe, as Herodian relateth, though he ascribeth the occasion of it, to a dreame of Seuerus.

(2) Those two objects Didius and Riger, who gaue some hinderance to Severus his beginning, being thus defeated of their high hopes; the third, which was Albinus, feemed now a more dangerous cloud, which would altogether ouer-cast his brightnesse & glory, if it were not dispersed or blown back in time: and therefore to make faire weather with him, hee created him Cafar and his Successor in the Empire, but created nime agar and missureejop in the empire, out afterwards his good fortunes thus swelling in the East, and himselfe full courted by Ambassisdors from all parts, with their tender of subjection, he began to an parts, with their tender of indication, he began to grow proud, and to difdaine any Copartner in State: and thereupon first feerety sought the destruction of his Casar; which failing, he then proclaimed him Traitor and Enemy to Rome.

Proclaimed Traitor, He wageth warte against Severus. (3) Clouds Albinus brought into the fevnex pected dangers, prepared his firengths, and with the choice of all Britishe entred France, and necre vnto Lions tooke the field against the Emperour; but with no better successe, then Pescennius had done in Alia the leffe, in the fame place (as Herodian, Eutropius and Spartianus affirme) where Darius was first ouerthrowne by Alexander. The Armies ioining, a bloody Battaile was fought, which through the great prowesse of the Britains went at first so fore against Secretar, that being beaten off his Horfe, despairing of Victorie, and almost of Life, cast off his Imperiall Robe, and flying, ignobly hid himselfe. Letwo one of Seuerus his Captaines, kept aloofe all this while, of purpole as was thought, to bring the Emperourto ruine, and now upon report that hee was flaine, came on most furiously with his forces, in hope of win-Albinus vanqui-thed by Saverus. ning both the day, and the Empire to himselfe: whereupon the Emperor drawne againe into the field, the day was his by the meanes, but not the meaning, of Letus: whom on attainder of his Treason he afterward put to the fword. That day a great part afterward purte the tword. A matchay a great part of the flower of Britaine was flaine, together with their valiant Leader Albinus, a Captaine of exemplary Senerity and Martiall discipline, a great admirer of Hannibal and Marius; for the Scipio's he thought them rather fortunate then valiant, and in the time of his service in this Iland, there was no toile which hee commanded his fouldiers, but himfelfe would beare therein a part, even in carrying of burdens on his Backe and yet so farre from vaunting of his valour, as that when an Historian would have recorded his noble Acts, he willed him to write of theirs who were already dead, whom he need not to flatter; hol-

After this overthrow Senerus forthwith fent Heraclianus hither, to keepe the rest of the Britaines in quiet, and to be Lieutenant in Albinue his roome, as Spartianus writeth: Of whole affaires therein little remembrance is left, onely it feemeth by a Coine of Seuerus minted in his fecond Confulship, which fell in the yeere of our Sauiour one hundred ninety eight, and about the period of this his last Competitor, that the Britaines gaue not at first their service and servicede to this man, untill he had made the purchase of it by his fword; the brand of which he hath left to posteritie in figuring the Goddesse Victory seated vpon spoiles, and writing in a shield, Victoria Britan.

And neglecting the vttermost and vast Northerne parts of this Iland, drew a Wall or Fortification, which might services a Rampire and division betwist the iauage and more civill people, firetching it selfe thorow the whole Iland, even from Sea to Sea; that is, from the Bay of Itum (otherwise Solweyfrith) in Scotland, to the doore of Tine or Tinmouth, containing in length One hundred thirty and two Miles, as Sextus Aurelius Viefor, Eutropius, and others account them, and by tome Severus furns. more. This Wall he built of Turfes and Timber ftrong-ine ferticel with Bulmerles and T lie fensed with Bulwarkes and Turrets, necre vnto (if not upon) the foundation of Adrians Wall, the track whereof thorow the Countries of Westmorland and Northumberland, is more pleasing to bee seene, then casie in word to be expressed. For which his Acts thus heere atchieued about the yeere of grace two hun-dred and eleuen, he affurned to himfelfe his much defired Sirname Britamicus Maximus, causing in his owne and his fonnes Coines that inscription to bee stamped.

(15) This Emperour by Historians is rancked with the best, both for his warres, wherein hee was verie fortunate, and for his wifedome in gouerning the Empire: and yet is he taxed very fharpiy both by Sabelli-em for fundry vices, and by Eufebim for furring up the fift Persecution of the Christians in the tenth yeere of his Raigne. In which treneus the learned writer, among many others, suffred Martyrdome: howbeit, towards his end, he became more milde to them, as faith Saint I erome: as alfo that he was a diligent reader of the excellent workes of Tertullian, whom viually he termed his Master.

(16) This Emperour was by birth an African, to which Country his affection & graces were so much, that the illustrious Citie of those parts, recorded vpon their coyne his many fauours by this Inscription, I N-DVLGENTIA AVG. IN CARTH. and in- rede. shrined him amongst the Gods of that Nation, He was the sonne of Geta, his mother Pia Fuluia: himselfe rough, cruell, couetous, and ambitious, and his nature, relishing too much of the Punick craft and fimulation: otherwise a most expert Soldiour, and a worthy Prince, more battles hee fought, and more victories obtained, then any other that euer hadruled before him the Romane Empire. In a word, of vertues and vices to equally composed, that lastly this grew into a customed speech: It had been egod that this Emperour had neuer beene borne, or beeing Emperour. that hee had never died.

Bassianus the Elder, stiling himself Britannicus Maximus, as it should feem; was admitted his Fathers fellow Emperour at Yorke at his refiding there, to quiet the Northern Britains; wherein also hee gaue him the name Antoninus; for so implieth that famous Law, bearing jointlie the names of Seuerus and Antoninus, enacted by them at Yorke, touching the interest and right that masters have to the goods and possessions of their servants. for refuling to defend a murdolefull Hymnes and ruefull ditties. Thence againe he was remoued to Mars his field, where was erected a foure-square frame of Timber, of a huge height and compasse, the stories still mounting to the toppe with fundry afcents, and richly beautified with strange varieties of gold and purple ornaments, and images of great Art and price: On the second of which alcents, was placed the Emperours faid Bed and Statue, with infinite store of sweetest odours, brought thither from all parts of the Citie: which done, the yong Nobles brauely mounted on Horsebacke, rid round about in a kinde of dance or measure, and another fort likewise (who represented great Princes) in their Coaches, whereupon his fucceffor in the Empire, first ferting fire to the frame, forthwith all the people did the like on all fides: and when the whole began to be on flame, an Eagle fecterly enclosed within, was let fly out of the toppe; which foaring a great height, and out of fight, the people followed it with shouts and praiers, supposing that therewith the Emperours soule was carried vp to heaven. And thus Senerus, which was before a man of Gods making, was now become a God of mans making : and the more to preserue the memory of his fathers glory, Caracalla erected a magnificent Edifice, which he inftiled Senerus his Porch, wherein with most exquisite Art, and admired workmanship, were portraited all his Fathers warres and triumphs, atchieued here in Britaine or ellewhere,

(3) But prefently after, these two vingodly sonnes of this new supposed God, so much emulated each others glory, that the deadly sparkes of enuy, blowne a long time with the bellowes of their ambitious defires, brake out into the flames of murther and blood, being brethren by one Father, but not by the same mother (as it is said) & in this only like, that they were both starke naught, though both in contrarie kinds of Vices. And albeit the Empresse Inlia had sought by all meanes to make peace betwixt them, both formerly, here in Britaine, and now, after their returne to merly, here is being a following their returne to Rome: yet the delite of a fole someragnty, had beene a long time for rooted in Baffianae his heart (for which he had twice attempted his Fathers life, and fo much hasted his death, that hee flew his Physitians, because they had dispatched him no sooner) could not indure an equall (much leffe a confronter) in authority, and therefore in the Court and in the armes of the Em-Geta fisine in his presse, he slew her sonne Geta, in a time least suspected when he had fate with him in state and disdaine, the terme of one yeare and twenty two daies,

(4) And to cloake this fratricide with shew of confraint, first to the Souldiers, and then in the Senate, he accufeth his Brother to have fought his death, and that in defence of his owne life, he was forced to flay the other, and flying to the Pretorian Cohorts for the fafetic of his life, as though further conspiracies had been intended against him in the City, & at his return commanded Papinianus the famous Ciuilian, to excule the murther in his Pleas at the Barre; which when he Papiniozza flaine refused, hee caused him to bee flaine, as also all those, that had beene acquainted with Geta; whereby fo many of the Nobilitic perished, that he was thereby ac-counted another Nero in Rome: and by his fauorites the name of Geta was raced out of all monuments & imperiall inscriptions, as we have seene some of the defaced vpon some Altar stones found here in Brit

(5) Of nature he was subtile, and could well disfemble with them whom hee feared, and make shew of lone where hee deadly hated; alwaies fitting himselfe to the humours of flatteries: Among the Germans, counterfetting their gate and garments; In Greece, be like Alexander, bearing his necke formewhat awry; In Troy, would refemble Achilles; alwaics fo Camelon-like, as the Romans (his followers) were therewith ashamed. In a word, Caracalla (faith Dio) neuer thought of doing good, hecause (as himselfe consessed) he neuer knew any goodnes.

(6) And to fill up the measure of all iniquitic, as one regardlesse of humanity or shame, he married Iulia his mother in law, late wife to his owne Father (4 finne(faith S. Paul) not to be named among the Gen- 1.Cor. 5.1. tiles) and by Sext. Aur. Entrop. and Spar. reported vpon this occasion. It fortuned that Iulia in presence of Caracalla, either by chance, or of purpose rather, let fall the vaile which she wore, discouring thereby her Europius. naked breasts and beauty, which was great; whereat the Imperour casting his lascinious eie and bewraying sabillieut. the Emperous catting its internocests and on supplying this affection, presently faid, Were it not valsayful, I should not be unwilling: to whom she replied (without faceth. respect of modesty) that all things were lawfull to him that made lawes for others, but was subject himselfe to none: forgetting at once both the murther committed vpon Geta her fonne, and the scandals that accompanied so foule a sinne, the pleasure wherof they did not long enioy, both their deaths (by Gods vengeance) foone after enfuing.

(7) For Caracalla remaining in Mesopotamia, and carrying(as it feemeth) a guilty confcience, and fuspition of his life, fent to Maternus, whom hee had left Gouernour of Rome, to affemble all the Aftrologers & ethto forceters Mathematicians (vnto which learned imposters he alwaies gaue especiall credit) and of them to enquire how long he should live, and by what death he should die. Maternus having so done, wrote for answere, that Macrimus his Prefett of the Pratorium (then with him in his expeditios) went about to murther him. Which is thought rather in enuy of Macrimus to have beene fained, then by any Astrological directions so given forth. This letter and others comming to Caracalla his hand, at fuch time as hee was busie about his difport, he deliuered them to Macrinus to reade, and giue him the report at his returne. In perufall wherof finding himselfe to be accused of Treason, and searing left by the sequell hee might bee brought into greater danger, he incensed one Martial a Centurion(whose brother the Emperour had lately slaine) to murther him; which was soone performed, and occasion in the fields offred; for Caracalla stepping aside from his traine to ease nature, Martial, as though he had beene called, ran hastily in without hindrance or fulpect, and with his dagger flabbed him to death; but Generalia kild. being too late perceived, was yet so hastily pursued, that he was hewed to peeces before his tongue could reueale the principall Traitour. Iulia his incestuous wife hearing of his death, with poilon flew her selfe at Antioch, leaving her shame to survive her life.

(8) Antoninus Caracalla, faith Eufebius, raigned Emperour feuen yeares and fixe moneths, but Herodian, Spartianus, and Die allor him fixe yeares Spartianus, and Dio allor him fixe yeeres and two moneths: he died the eight of Aprill, and yeere of Christ two hundred eighteene. The testimonies of these many writers notwithstanding, together with the place and circumstances of his death, and the person by whom it was committed, the British Historians do contradict, reporting him to bee flaine in Britaine in Battaile against the Fiets, by one Caraneeus a man of a Old Manufer. lowe and obscure birth. But by this it may seeme Rep. 136. fome wounds received by him in those British warres, gaue occasion to that errour. He left a sonne not by his incestuous mother, nor by Glantilla his wife, who he exiled into Sicily, but by a mistris, whose name was Iulia Simiamira his cosen German, and indeed no better then a common strumpet: which corrupt rootes brought forth as bitter fruits, euen Heliogabalus, of whom hercufter we shall have occasion to write.

N profecuting our intencourse, for setting downe the AEIs and Lines of fundry Emperours, hecreafter fucceeding, I know I shall hardly satisfie my Readers, being no way able to give content to my felfe, in that, on the one fide, finding very few re-

It feemeth that the continual! striuing for the Imperial Diademe, and their neerer hazards at home, made them contented to give Britaine some peaceable breathing, and so depriue vs of the Romane Records of those times : which want if I should supply out of our home-bred British Writers, I might be thought, not so much to repaire the ruines of our Monuments, as to heape more rub-bish vpon them. (2) Opilius Macrinus from obscure and base parentage, by fauours of the Emperour, without any notable defert in himfelfe, first afpired to the Office of a Prefect, and at last by the election of the Souldiers, to the Dignitie Imperiall. So farre from suspicion of Caracallaes death, by the outward appearance of a secming forrow, that hee was held of all most free from the Treason, and the second person worthy of their voice. For first, the Title was conferred upon aged Audentius, a man of good fort, much experience, and an excellent Captaine; whose wisdome could not bec drawne to aduenture his life under the weight of fo. vneasie and dangerous a Crowne, but excusing himselfe by the printlege of his age, as farre vnfit to wield the troubles (much leffe to increase the glorie) of the Empire, refused their offers, but with returne of as many thankes as they had given him hands or voices. Whereupon they againe confulted and determined for Macrinus, which as willingly received, as Audentiserefuled : vnto whom they fwore fealtie, but not long after failed in performance,

(3) He made for his Cafar, Diadamenus his sonne, Diadame changing his name (a viuali custome at their election) into Antoninus, because that name was gracious a- Called Antoninus mong the Romans. The Scrate at home confirmed all that the Armie had done abroad; vnto whom it feemed their right, as it were by prescription, to have the election of the Emperours.

(4) His first expedition was against Artabanus King of the Parthians, that hafted against the Romans. for wrongs received by Caracalla deceased : but after three great and dangerous Battles, came to an attone-ment, and a peace betwixt them concluded. After this, as free from further troubles, he returned to Antioch in Syria, and there spent his time in Banquets. and other sensuall pleasures, being drenched so farre therein, that the Armie began to dislike his Gouernment, and to fauour young Bassianus the sonne of Caracalla, then prefent at Emefa a Citie in Phanicia, with Mafa his Grandmother by his Mothers fide, who there had built a Temple confectated to the Sunne, and therein ordained him a Prieft; for which cause he was called Heliogabalus, that is to fay in the Phanician lie fignes indeed: for nature had plentifully adorned him with the complements of her gifts, had his mind beene answerably furnished with vertue. But as the one was ouer-prodigall and lauish in his outward forme, so was the other as sparing and desective in bestowing of her inward gifts, insomethe that both in minde and garment, he seemed to be that which in truth he was not. This Emperour, as appeareth by the trust ne was not. A me compressor, as appearent by the recurse of his money, tooke it no meane addition of honour to his imperial Lignitie, to be filled, The Priefl of the Sunne; which in the Affrian Tongue is called El, from whom he tooke the furname Elagabal. (2) Affoone as hee had fettled the Empire firme

Language, The Priest of the Sunne. (5) To this Temple in their vaine denotions re-forted many of the Romane Souldiers; and seeing the beautie of the youth, allured Mafa to bring him to their Campe: where knowne to be the sonne of Caraealla, the Souldiers proclaimed him Emperour, and maintained his right against Macrinus; who after this reuolt, met young Heliogabalus in the Confines betwixt Phanicis and Syris, where was fought a blou-die Battle, and Macrinus forfaken of all, and driven to flie; who with his fonne hasting thorow Afia and Bithima, came laftly to Chalcedon, where he fell licke, and was there, together with Diadumenus, put to death the seuenth day of sune, the yeere of Christs Incarnation two hundred and nineteene, when hee had raigned one yeere, one moneth, & twenty eight daies.

(3) Hisapparell was rich, and most extreme costlie, and yet would he neuer weare one garment twice: his Shooes embellished with Pearles and Diamonds; his Seats strowed with Muske and Ambershis Bed couered with Gold and Purple, and befet with most costly temels; his Way strewed with the Powder of Gold and Siluer ; his Veffels (even of baleft vie) all Gold ; his Lamps burning with no other Oile then the Balmes of India and Arabia; his Fifth-Ponds filled with no other water then of diffilled Rofes; his Ships (in his Naumachies or Ship fights) floted in a River of Wine; his Bathes most flately built, and againe after they were once vied, presently pluckt downe; his Plate of finest Gold, but neuer ferued twice to his Table; his Rings and Jewels most rich, yet neuer worne twice; his Concubines many and chargeable, but not one laine with twice; his ny and chargeable, but not one tame with twice; nis Diet to profule, that at enery fupper in his Court, was whally ipent a Thousand Pound Sterling: inuting the vising spens as nouseas remastering: inuting the chiefe Citizens to a Feafs, hee firewed all the Roomes with Saffron, as it were with Auflers, laying, That fach Cattle wave worth of fach cofty Litter. Never the Sea, with him no Fifb was caten: in the Lend, no Flofb: whole Meales made of the Tongues of linging Birds and Peaceeks, or of the Braines of most costly creatures, alwaies faying, That meat was n't fauorse, whose fauce was not coffer. And indeed to coffly it was, that the renenewes of Germany, France, B itaine, Spaine, Italie, Sicilia, Gracia, Afia, Syria, Fgpt, crabia, and all the llands, were not fufficient to defray the charges.

(4) In his Progress, this hundred Chariers followed him, laden with Strumpets, Eoyes, and Bawdes, for whom he built a Strumes in his Court, wherein himselfer in the artise of the structure of the structure of the structure. in the attife of an Harlot, made to them folemne and Action Lampid: fet Orations, terming them therein his Fellow-Souldiers; Herodien. and Companions in Armes, with Instructions for them how to practile with most varietie their filthy Luxuries. In regard of which kinde of actions, one doth make this doubt, whether were greater his boundleffe Prodigalitie, his stupendious Lecherie, or his soppith Foolerie: the last of which his Imperiall Vertues, he gaue proofe of, when he gathered in the City ten thoufand waight of Spiders, professing that thereby he vn-derstood how great a City Rome was: at another time, ten thousand Mice, and a thousandwizels, which hee brought forth in a publike shew to the people, for brought forth in a publike niew to the people, for fome wife State-purpofe, like the former.

(5) In Rome he built a Temple confectated to the

Sume, (like to that in Phanicia, whereof himselfe was Priest) commanding the Christians therein to worthip : as also a Chatter-house for women to meet and determine of their Attires; and brought into the Sedetermine of their Attires; and brought into the se-mate house his mother Semiamira, allowing her a Voice among the Senators. In modelite I forbeate to write the particulars of his vn-manly libidinous filthinesse. adding only that which a judicious Author speakes of adding only that which a understood author speakes of him: Kings (faith he) at they shau greater power to sinne then other men, so have they lesser speakes in the circ of the any man; for being set above others in the circ of the World, they are as Markes that are aimed at, and lie open to the shute of Renenge. And so was the state of this Superlatine Monster, whose owne Conscience still flung him, even in the midft of his fivecteft finnes, ltung nim, suen in the mitait of his livectett tinnes, and therefore euer expecting fome violent end, hee prepared silken Halters richly wrought to hang him ielfe, if need were; and Golden Knines to flab himfelte, or cut his throat; and built a goodly Tower of exceeding height, adorned with Gemmes and Gold of inuading tengits autorited with termines and sold of inval-liable coft, that thence he might call himselfe head-long, having these words oft in his mouth, That hope-euer he died, his death should be pretious in the cits of all euer ne atea, put acato poot a ve pressous on sine etes of au men. And likewife to cut off, in Lawyers their continual felling of Inflice (the bane of all Common wealths) for a fee, he granted a publike & ferreward to fuch as should plead gratis. By which courses, his ciuill affaires were nobly managed, and his warres likewise proued as prosperous; for hee triumphed with great glory ouer the Parthians : The Germanes alfo, who in furious manner had passed the Riuers Danuby, and the Rhine, in many skirmishes he put backe, and forced them to their former obedi-

Aximinus, a man barbarous by birth and disposition, (himfelfe a Thracian, his father named Nices. borne in Gotland, very obscure, his mother Ababa of little better rancke) spent his youth in keeping of Cattell, the pouerty of his parents admitting no better maintenance : yet afterwards his formnes brought him vnto great advancement, and that by working vpon the outward object of his person, being for shape and strength (if the reporter deserve credit) rather to be thought a vast Giant, then described for a goodly man: For Iulius Capitolinus, affirmes his height to be eight foote and an halfe by Geometricall measure, and his Body answerable in euery pro-portion, infomuch, as he did weare as a Ring on his thumb, the * Bracelet which his wife vied to weare on her arme, a stature thought vncredible; and yet Islephus, an Author of great credit, doth confidently record, that one Eleazar a Iewe accompanied Darius the Kings sonne of Persia vnto Rome, (sent by Vitelli-us to Tiberius for an hostage) whose height, as he saith, was fully feuen cubits, a measure surmounting this.

(2) This Maximinus increasing strength with rowth, left his trade of Cattle-keeping, and reforted to the Romane Campe then in Syria, where for his admirable height, he was admitted by Septimus Senerus into the rancke of a common Souldier, and shortly after , preferred to bee one of his Guarde. Baffianus made him a Coronell, and Heliogabalus gave him the leading of certaine foote : but the last Emperour Alexander, advanced him to be a Captaine of the fourth Legion, whose death notwithstanding hee disloiallie practifed (of fuch force is the defire of Soueraignty, which makes men forget all bonds of gratitude and loiall trust) and was thereupon by the Souldiers elected Emperour, with fealty sworne vnto him.

(3) The ignoble Vpftart thus borne from the Maximingiof dunghill, vpon the wings of Fortune, vinto the leat of maughty dipo-Maichte, thought the increase of his pride was an increase of State; and knowing hee had nothing for which he might describe to be loued, he studied in the whole managing of his estate, how by all meanes hee might be feared. Hee therefore displaced Senatours, Captames, Souldiers, and whom not ? with murders, banishments, and confiscations of their goods:

an strick effectally he did cut off, whom hee supposed to have beginnings. The christina knowledge of his bath segnings. The christina knowledge of his bath segnings. Anteus, and Hercules, for his strength; now they all tearmed him, Bustris, Phalaris, and Cyclops, for his fauage crueltie.

(4) But his life being odious to God and Man, was often attempted to be taken away; first, by Maximu, a man of a Consular dignitie; then by Quarcinus (whom Capitolinus calleth Ticus) fet on by the mus (whom capitonius calleth riese) let on by the old Souldiers of Septimus Seaerus, that had beene differenced by Maximinus; and lattly by the Army in Africa, who elected Gordinus (their Proconful, a very Princely qualities) his Cefar the Senate likewife confirming all that they had done. He tooke to himselfe the furname Africanus either in respect of his Pro-Confulthip which he exercised in that Province, or else as desceded from Seipio his family who bore that furname : His fonne Gordianus likewife was stiled Angustus, as appeareth by his Coines, whereon hee writ-eth himselfeA v G. and vpon the Reueric, Liberali-

(5) In the meane while, aged Gordianus with the Enlignes and glory of an Emperor, entred Carthage, with blessings and acclamations of ioy: whereat his old enemic Capelianus, Gouernour of Numidia and Mauritama (Provinces in Africke) much envied; and gathering forces in Maximinus his name, made head against him, and shortly gaue him Battle, wherein Gordiamus the younger was flaine before the walles of the Citie. The father feeing his Cafars difastre, and himselfe an Emperour onely nominall, and his new risen Sunne to have passed the circle of his height, and now to approch to the fetting and fall, wished againe his private estate; and in despaire, griese, and disdaine of his enemies successe, with the Girdle which he wore, strangled himselfe to death, when hee had beene stiled Emperour only twenty fix daies: whereat Maximinus was not a little joifull, and the Senate no lesse perplexed, seeing themselves deprived of their hopes, and now laid open to the Tyrants will, who like a Lion came raging on, threatning reue nge in all their blouds.

(6) The State thus flanding, all the Peeres and Princes thereof affembled themselues together at Rome : and in the Temple of Iupiter, after long debating of their present dangers, concluded, that Maximus Pupienus and Clodius Balbinus together should bee must expensis and Loans: satismus together mount bee Emperours; men of great account and fauour with the people. These taking Oath and Imperiall Robes, leuied forces to maintaine their cause: and Balbinus taking charge of the Citic, Pupienus marched to meet Maximinus, who in great pride had passed the Alpes, entred Italie, and now laid siege against Aquieliea; in which this was very memorable, that The Citizens wines cut off the haire of their heads, to make bow-strings for refistance of so hatefull a T yrant: where after long af-fault prevailing little, his discontented Souldiers fell to mutinie : and entring his Pauilion, at noone day without refiftance flew both him and his forme, bearing the same whom hee had created his Cafar, his fonce shine, and whose monies, as he minted them, we have inferted at the entrance of his Empire, Their heads for a Trophy they fent before them to Rome, where with fuch acceptations they were received, as that the Senate acknowledged themselves to be rid of a Monster nus Maximus and Clodius Balbinus thus elected together for Emperors, the one in action, and the other resident, a greatsedition chanced betwist the Senate and Souldiers, which grew to a bloudie iffue among the Citizens, and

Rome it selfe was set on fire in fundrie places; the Emperours presence and au-

But the death of Maximinus (and his head happily brought them at the instant) gaue present life to their dying hearts. And Pupienus comning to Aquielies as much quieted the Armie, sent backe the Lieutenants to their places of charge, and with great pompe and praise returned to his Fellow-Emperour.

The Pretorian Souldiers tooke themselues to bee taxed with those aspersions, and the rather, because the German Strangers were brought in to be of the Guard, as if themselves were not to bee trusted : so turning their fpleene against the present I mperours, sought to set vp a new, which shortly after they found opportunitie toeffer

The Emperours

(4) For these Emperours, though aged and wise, were not so linked together in affection, as they were neere joined in authoritie ; and therefore the winde of emulation had the easier passage betwixt the chinkes of their owne conceits; the one prizing his wildome and government to be more indicious; the other, his birth and Nobilitie to be more honorable: and each of them having his owne Guard, flood vp-on his owne Guard, though one Palace contained them both and both their endeuours euer well conforting for the bufinelles of the Empire.

(5) At this time the Provinces of Parthia and Germanie grew vnquiet, and by civill difeords, endangered their fubications : to represse which, the Emperors agreed to goe in person, the one into the East, the other into Germanie. Now whilest these great preparations were in making, the Capitoline-Games were celebrated in Rome, whereunto all (almost) resorted, but especially the new-come Guards of the Emperours. The Pretorians finding the aduantagious time, which they had long waited for, fuddenly in armour affailed the Court; which Pupienus perceiuing, sent in all haste for Balbinus, and both their Guards for defense. But his Fellow-Emperour, vpon a vaine suspicion detra-ded time himselfe, and hindered the forwardnesse of the Guards, so that these Traitours had easie accesse into both the Emperours Chambers, where in their rage they dispoiled them of their Imperial Robes, and haled these poore aged and innocent Emperours. like two Theeues thorow the middeft of the Citie: Laftly, they flew them, and left their bodies to despightfull ignominie.

(6) These Emperours raigned together one yeere, and somewhat more, and died the yeere of Christ two hundred thirty nine: in which yeere happened to great an Eclipse of the Sun, that the nooneday thereby became as darke as the mid-night.

Thence marching to Antioch, recouered the Citie, forcing Sapor to forfake the Province, and to content himselfe with his owne demaines.

(4) But long this Sunne went not without a Cloud, nor his fauourable fortunes without a checke; for Missitheus, his Nestor, paying Natures debt before it was due (being poiloned by Philip, as Eutropius affirmeth) was wanting in counfell, & miffed for truft: nrmetn) was wanting in council, & milled for fruit to supply which, Philip (an Arabian, and of ignoble parentage) was made his Prefect, wife (I must needs lay) had hee beene moderate; and valiant in Armes, had he beene true. But the glory of a Diademe beheld with the falle light of ambition, so dimmed the eie of his dutifull affection, and blinded the fenses of his afpiring mind, that he, who from nothing was rifen to be fonthing, thought that also nothing worth, whilst it was shadowed with the name of a subject. First therefore he fought to winne credit with the Souldiers, to whom he was facible; to regard the poore, to whom hee was liberall; and in all things to outstripe his Soueraigne, to whom he was treacherous. Yong Gordianus vnable to endure his Prefectors delignes, or his owne diffraces, and perceiving the marke whereat he aimed, complained his wrongs in open affemblies, and to the Souldiers after this tenor.

His ouerthrow of the Romans, and death of Decius, n outward femblance was greeuoufly taken by ebonianus Gallus, that no man was so forward or reuenge as hee, and therefore the last in suspicion of Treason. The Armie hee strengthned, and daily encouraged, pretending great service against those barbarous Scythians, but all to gaine credit and liking of the Souldiers, whereby hee soone atchieued his defire, and with their applauses was proclaimed

(2) By Birth, he was descended of an honourable Familie in Rome : but true honour cannot harbour where dwelleth treachery and fallhood, as it was with him, when appointed by Deeius to bee Gouernour of

Myfia, and to keepe the passages from the inuading Gothes, the defire of Rule io corrupted his minde, that he plotted with them against the Arme, and betraied the trust and life of his Sourraigne.

(3) Neither is he stained with the blot of Trea-

(4) Gallus little regarding these troubles abroad, confumed his time idly in Rome, rather as a Bondman to his owne voluptuous desires, then a Conquering Monarch; taking for his companion and Fellow-Emrour, his sonne Volustimus, as appeareth by inscrip-

(2) His Election at first was contradicted by the Italian Bands, in fauour of Valerianus their owne Leader, whom they fought to raife Emperour, the Senate also inclining thereto, the fame of the man among them was so renowned. The most voices therefore heard on his fide. Some haue rather accounted Emilianus an Vsurper, then ranked him in the catalogue of lawfull Emperours.

(3) But feeing Eutropius doth allow him the place, we are not to dispute his title or claime; only his short time of gouernment admitteth no matters of large discourse, being cut off in the budde, before the graft had time to spring. For his Armie disliking what themselues had done, and hearing of the worths and election of Valerianus, laid down their weapons born in his defense, and tumultuously murdered him in the heat of their blouds, after hee had raigned in name,

F eucr the saying of the wise Athenian Solon (spo-ken to Crassus the rich king of Lydia) was true, That no man can be happy before the day of his death: then most truly may it be verified of this Valerianus the next fucceeding Emperor:whose eers were multiplied with increase of honour, untill they came to seventy and seuen, but then were clouded with such ignominious miseries, as the like had neuer hapned to any Romaine Emperour before him, and (I may well say) to no other Monarch in the world before living: Such is the Ordinance of our great God, sometimes from the the Orunance of am greas Gon, to meetings from the Danghit to raile men of low degree, and to place them with Princes in the Chaire of Maieflie; then againe to bring down the Mighty from their seate of Glory, & to leave them chained with the pooreft Captines, & bafelt Vaffals. For fuch was the State of that Great & Proud King of Babel, who from the height of Maiesty fell into the coditions of an vnreasonable Beast. And so was it with Valerianus, though not vtterly abandoned fro the Societie of men, as Babels King was: yet was he cari-ed Captine vnto a Nation whole Society was fearce humaine, and where his viage was more then barbarous,

(2) This man was both nobly descended, and of (2) This man was both nobly deteended, and of fo great cheeme among the Romans, that beeing but a private, and then allo ablent, they chole him for their Confor, an Office of high dignitie, conferred e-uer yponthe Belt, as Trebelliss Pellic, who wrote the Hilfory of his Life, hath declared. (3) For Sapores the fauage King of Persia, making great spoile in Syria, Cilicia, and Cappadocia, drew Vale rian from Rome into Mejopotamia, to withfland his rage, where firiking Battell with him was left (either by Treason or Chance) without sufficient Guard to fecure his Person, and was there taken Prisoner by the

Perfuss, having then raigned feuen yeeres (whereof two were fpent in fpilling of the bloud of Saints) and thence forward, the reft of his life was enthralled to a most miserable and mercilesse scruitude: For the Tyrannizing Persian pust vp with this fortunate gale, to an excessine swelling of pride; when soener he was disposed to take Horfe, made V alerianus his Foot-stoole, causing this Greatest Monarch of the World to whom all Nations did homage, to bow downe his necke and backe for himselfe thereon to tread, and mount into his Saddle: In which vnsufferable flaucric, his old body indured without release, to the end of his most wretched life, which by some Authours account was full fenen yeeres more; the very time of the Babylonian Kings abasement.

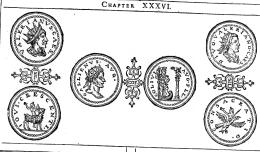

(4) But herein the milery of Valerianus is much greater then Nabuehadnezars was, in that God both restored him to his former glory, and indued him with heauenly grace to confesse his tinnes; whereas Valerianus perished in the desperate calamitie whereinto ansi perithea in the desperate catamine whereince he was fillen as Englesia thewesh in the words:

thie; who with his eldest not long after subdued by Aureolus viurping Illyria (against Gallenus then receiued Soueraigne by the Roman Senate) and his youngest betraied to murder by plot of Odenatus, left the dif-tracted Empire to tho otheree, of which the last difdaining much the indignitie offred to the State of Rome, by that bale captinitie of Valerian, whose calamity nothing touched the fense of his vanatural fonne, entred a warre against the Persians, and tooke from them their Cities Nifabis and Carras. But fuch was the moderation of this man, that although hee had power of an independant Sourraignety, yet he held fill a good correspondencie and intelligence in all his actions of Gouernment, with Gallsenus, to whom he fent (as monument of Victorie and Revenge) such of the Persian Nobilitie as became his Prisoners : and thus Odenatus did conquer, and Gallenus triumph. But fuch was the basenesse of the other, that when he could not by any Princely vertue in himselfe, eclipse the true merit of Odenatus, he endeuoured to deface by treacherie what he could not suppresse by valour. But in this failing, hee made him then (through feare) copartner of his hee made nin then (inrough reare) copartner of his Empire, filling him Augustus, and stamping his face and the Persian Triumph vpon the publike Coine of the State, by approbation of the Senate, leaving him alone to defend those Frontiers of the Empire, whilest himselfe, neither regarding his old fathers miseries, (most miserable that he had so vanaturall a sonne) the dishonour of the Romane State, norther evolts of the Provinces, whereof newes was daily brought him, spent his unprincely thoughts upon fruitlesseduices, as in reserving sundry Fruits and Flowers, that they might grow greene and flourish all seasons of the yeere; and ces. Yet had hee a Ladie of excellent beauty and allurements, Cornelia Salonina Pipara, to his wife, the daughter of the King of the Marcomanni, whole feature wee finde often minted vpon her Monies. His sonne by her Saloninus hee adopted Cafar, of whom there is no more remembred in Storie, then that hee was borne noble, trained vp princely, and perished through the errours of his father, and not his owne. And to his brother Licinius V alerianus (to whom the father had given the title of Cafar) he added the honour of Angusus. And therefore we have not held it improper, to adioine to his their monies in the front of his life.

(2) The calamities of this Emperours time were so many, as almost exceed credit: and Signes showed both in the Heauens and the Earth, manifested his wrath, that fate upon the Throne of Iasper, from whose presence issued Thundring, Lightnings, and Voices. For (by Writers of best credit) the Sanne was clouded as vnder sackcloth, and not seene for many daies together. Earth-quakes great, and fearfully refounding, o-ucrthrew Cities and other edifices, shaking the ground by Earth-q fo terribly, that vast Caues, and hideous gaping bowels of the earth were thereby laid open, and whercout (no leffe strangely) flowed great streames of last waters. The Earth roared, and seemed to thunder, when there was no voice heard in the aire. The Sea ouer-swelled her bankes, and brake into many Continents, drowning Countries, Cities, and People : and (besides all these) so violent a Pessilence raged, that in Rome no leffe then 5. thousand persons died in a day

(3) These miseries somewhat mooued this Heahenish Emperour to remorse : and thinking thereby to pacifie the wrath of the Dinine Powers, hee staied the Persecutions of the Christians, sending out his Edicts in fauour of them. For not only the Heauens, Earth, and Seas declared the anger of their God, out of whose mouth went a two-edged sword, but the Provinces also seemed to be remoued out of their places. The Souldiers of all parts electing their owne Generals, advanced no leffe then Thirty at once, who affumed the title of Empethen very stones, who anumed the title of emper-rours, but are recorded to Posserties by the name of Viuping Tyrants. And as they were all deadly oppo-lite each to other, so were they jointly almost all bent against Galienus; whereby the Roman Empire was more oppressed with her owne forces, then euer it had been by forraine Powers. And fince fixe of them assumed the Purple Robe in this Westerne Angle of the Empire, it will not be impertinent to the course of Story, with a light touch to remember them, and to expresse their Monies, as we have done the rest of those that held the reines of gouernment in these parts of the Romane

And these againe, as all Populars greedie of Innouation from him and Junius Cassius Postinmus his sonne, tooke both honour and life, after ten yeares gouernment. This opportunity either made by L. Flianus, or fitly taken, mounted him vp with ease into that Emperiall throne, in which he sate not with like fortune of continuance, though of conclusion. To this man succeeded together, M. Aurelius Victorinus, and Lucius his son; both in a Tumult necre Colam by their fouldiors murthered. And had not the inordinate luft of the elder, blemished his other vertues, he had to al the most excellent Emperors bin nothing inferiour, in the best of their other vertues.

(7) The reftleffe humor now of the giddy Commons, next fetleth it felfe vpon Aurelius Marius, a fo-ueraigne furable in his meane condition to their base affections (for he was no better then a Black-smith) yet to him a man of their own meanes & making, they were no lesse vinconstant and cruel, then to the rest; after three daies, setting an end of his gouernment, with ter three dates, tetting an end of his gouernment, with a fword of his own forging. And therfore Pineflus Testricus, the father and forme, though aftending the throne of Maiefile, with the greatest applause of that people, and filling it wp with much merit and happy fucces of their own, when they considered the insufficient of their own, when they considered the insufficient has been desired as a support of the control of ferable infolencies and desperate practises of that prophane ranke, chose rather to adorne Aurilians Triumph, in a voluntarie captiuitie, then to live and rule at the denotion of a lawlesse multitude. And these times seemed no lesse fatally bent to bloud, disorder, and tyranny in other parts as well as these: For the Pannonians raised Ingenuus : The Myssians, A. Regillianus : The Egyptians, Æmilianus : In Africa Celsus was proclaimed: In Illyrieum, Aureolus: and in the East, Odenatus (a man the more famous for Zenobia, his glorious and magnanimous Wife; Whose valour was so feared of Galienus, that to make him his, hee admitted him his Fellow-Emperor, with the Stile of Augustus as we have remembred before.) The * Germans invade Italy : The b Gothes waste Greece, Pontus and Asia; The Samartians seize · Austricke and Hungary : The Persians robbe Syria: The Saxons breake into Gallia: The Franks into Spaine: In a word, all are in vproares, the fecond feale opened, and the Red-horse prepared for Battaile, whose Rider had received a great and sharpe Sword, with Commission given him to take Peace from the Earth: and these times of troubles are so famous in Storie, and the revolutions of Acts so agreeable to the words of the Prophecie, that they may feeme justly a most exact accomplishment of that sa-

(5) Finally, when Gallienus had raigned from his s. 1684. veeres, Martian, Heraelianus, and Ceronius, three of yeeres, Marian, reracuants, and Ceromus, duccor, this principal Captaines, (compounding together that one of them should be Emperour) plotted his death, whiles hee besieged the Citie Millan, where they traiterously murthered him, the yeere of our Lord Gellennthis two hundred fixty nine, after that hee had fuffered death and continuous formation in the had fuffered number of his the Empire to be rent in peeces, and viurped by many raignes Forraine and barbarous Nations.

Val. Aurelianu

An.Do. 271.

O short was the Raigne of the last Emperour Quintilis, that Aurelianus who followed him may be faid to be the Successor of Clau-dius, and not of him: being elected by his Legions in the East, as soone as the other had beene in Italy

Gole , whereof Quintilius failed, before his foot had well mounted the first step.
(2) This Valerius Aurelianus was of parentage

neither honourable nor rich, and yet his fortunes carried him to the height of both. Some recount his birth was of Dacia; others of Myfia; both so doubtful that Flauius V opifeus, (the copious tyriter of his Life) leaues it undecided, and to the censure of his Readers. His rifings were by the Warres; wherunto from his child-hood hee had a naturall inclination : and for continual carying of his weapons, was commonlie called Aurelianus the Sword-bearer.

(3) His feruice was fufficiently knowne to the Gemeral of diuers Prountes, who had forty fundry times implored him in the charge of a Lieutenant: and vader Cludius in Perfix he was the Coronell of the Horfe. In the warres of Sarmatia he is reported to haue flaine forty Enemies with his owne hands in one day; and at other seuerall times, to the number of nine hundred men, as both Vopifeus and Theoelius have affirmed.

And generally fo famous were his deeds, both before perable with Cefar and Afehe was Cafar, and after, as that he is by fome compa-red with Iulius and Alexander.

(4) Vpon the ratifying of his election by the Se-naie at Rome, hee halted not thither to be faluted and enstalled Emperour, but foorthwith marched against the Suenians and Sarmates, who fore infested the Empire with warres : and having foone fubdued them, and quieted those parts, in great haste hee came into Italie against the Germans, who with Fire and Sword had gone as farre as Milan: and them likewise with great valour hee forced thence. Then entring Rome with great pompe, caused the Wallesto bee repaired and inlarged, which was not lawfull but onely for Victorious Emperours. But long he flaied not, ere he returned into Syria, against the stour Lucene Zembia, whose braue resolutions, and warlike power for fight her Letter in answer vnto him (when being sorely tired, he profered her wealth, life, and liberty to yeeld) doth manifestly declare : the tenour thereof being as followeth.

Yea the atchinement of this Conquest was held so notable, that hee reputed himselfe the Restorer of the East, as it appeareth by the reuerse of his money here prefixed in the

(8) Hitherto this Emperours successes were very prosperous (we may well suppose) for his indulgence to the Christians, whose assemblies he permitted, and whose Bishops he so fauoured, that at their request hee banished Paulus Samosatenus the Héretike out of their Councels, and published an EdicF in the behalfe of their Synods. But afterward Satan minding to fift the Wheat, Eugh: Eug. HE Easterne Armie most potent and famous at the death of Tacitus, from them was expected the new Emperours election, which accordinglie they did, but with much more wisedome and deliberate circumspection, then the Souldiers of those times

(3) His first proceedings was to finde out the murtherers of Probus, whom hee scuerely punished, which tooke away all suspition of treason in himselfe. Then marching against the Sarmates, whose furie had pierced fo far into Panonia, that they threatned Italy it felfe, he ouerthrew with the flaughter of fixteen thoufand, and tooke twenty thousand of them prisoners. And leaving Carinus (his elder fonne) to governe Britaine, Gallia, Illyricum, and Spaine, himselfe with the younger, Numerianus, prepared for the East against the Persians, in which expedition he tooke in his way Mefopotamia, Selencia, and certaine cities whom the enemic had entred: and being furprized with ficknes, and not able to trauel, pitched his Pauilion vpon the shore of Tigris, where in the midst of his armic (about the yeere of our faluation 283.) garded from all suppofed dangers and affaults of man, felt the vnexpected stroke of death euen from the hand of God himselfe: for in his bed by a thunderbolt falling from heaven, he was flaine, with many others then present with him in his tent, and the same consumed altogether with lightning fire.

(4) The terrour thereof so daunted the courage (4) I he terroit increot to daunted the courage of his whole army, that no further they proceeded in their enterprife: and his death was fo grieuous vnto Numerianus now elected Emperor, that with continual weeping (a fault in few Sonnes who are raifed located and the Children Courth of Children by their fathers fall) his eies were so weakened, that he could not indure any light. V pon which accident, Arrius Aper, (his wines father) tooke occasion to conspire his death, hoping thereby to attaine the Empire himfelfe. For having stall times free accesse to his presence, at length in his closet hee secretly murthered him; pretending to the armie, that his infirmitie only kept him from light; and so leaving his body to putrifie and corrupt, in short space by the very sauor there-of the treason was descried, and the Traitor slaine by the hands of Dioclesian, who was both his Judge and

(5) His Empire thus ended before it was well begunne, the Armie proclaimed Dioclesian, a Principall man in the Campe for Emperor : who to vphold his election, made al his power for Gallia, against his Concuretton, made at his power for Gauda, against his Concur-rent Carinus, a man of profule fensialitie, who there had caused himselfe to bee proclaimed, and in his fa-thers absence had so ruled there and in Britaine, that Porphyrio living at the same time, gave out this testimonie, that Britaine was a fertile Prouince of tyrants. Betwixt these two Captaines, many skirmishes were fought with variable successe, till lastly in a set battell, Carinus was flaine by a Tribune, whose Wife he had defiled; whereby the Imperiall Title was iountly conferred vpon Dioclesian.

(6) The time that these three, the father and two sonnes raigned, is reported to be two yeers and somewhat more; and this last to die the yeere of Christs natiuitie,two hundred eighty foure.

Val. Maximian, Cafar and Emp.

He Empire thus devolued to Dioclestan, with appro-bation of the Senate, hee cuery way fludied to bee accounted worthy of the fame, as knowing well his birth was no way answerable to his present lot : and therefore chose for his Cafar, Maximianus, a man of better descent, very honourable, wise, and valiant, as was manifested in his first service against the Gaules, whom with an infinite number of pelants in that prouince, troubling the peace of the Romans, hee with much flaughter ouercame. For which exploit fo fortunately accomplished, the Emperor made him his Confort in the Gouernment,

(2) Diotlesians parentage is vncertainly reported by Writers, some making him the sonne of a Notary, and others of a meere Bondman; but all agreeing that his Country was Dalmatia, and his offpring very bafe. This man being but a Common Souldier, consulted with a Witch for his suture successe; who told him (if you please to beleeue the reporters) that he should become an Emperour after he had killed a Bore : to which he gane credit, and euer after was a great enemie to that beaft, and in time grew under Probus to fo great account for dexterity in expediting his affaires, that he was made Steward of his house, and now lastly elected to the Empire.

(3) The very first thing that he attempted, was the punishmet of his predecessors death: for which Arrius Aper being connicted before his tribunall feat, himselferiling suddenly from the Throne, ran him thorow with his fword, in outward thew for zeale of Iuflice, as not able to endure so foule afact : but in truth to fulfill the Prediction of his hostesse, the Druid; for that sper fignifieth a Bore. After which act, he held his Empire fully established.

(4) To let passe many imploiments and troubles of the state, these two Emperors chose to themselues two Cafars, whereby the One-bodied Eagle became againe foure-headed, and each almost of an equall authority. Dioclesian chose Galerius Maximinus, and Maximianus, furnamed Herculius, chose Conitantius Clorus a Roman Senator, enforcing them to put away their former Wines, & to take their Daughters, for an affurance of loue by the bonds of that Alliance; of whom the former was imploied for defence of Illyricum, and the other afterwards into Britaine against the Rebellions there railed by Caraufius, whose coinc is here set.

(5) This Carauflus by birth a Menapian, but of low Parentage, as Beda and Eutropius faith; who being appointed Admirall by the Romans to guard the Britif Seas, from the Pyrasies of the Saxons and Lower Germans, who with continuall robberies wasted the coasts, abused his authority both in suffering those Pirats to passe vnder Compositions, and in taking many shippes and much substance from the true subject to his owne vie : whereby in short time hee became very rich, and (like a cat fet to keepe mice from the larder) did more mischiefe then the Robbers themselves, Sabellicus reports, one very politike custome whereby he inriched himfelfe; and that was by fuffering the Pirats to take as much spoiles as possibly they could before hee would furprife them; whereby they were his in-fruments to rob others, and nothing to better them-

(6) Maximianus then warring in Gallia, and fearing the greatnes of his wealth and power, sent secretly to flay him by treacherie; and in the meane while furprifed many of his principall men at * Geffori-

faraufius defen-deth liis viurpa-tion fouen yeers, Maximiania a-gainst (araufius, (8) Against him Maximianus set forward with a puissant Armie, and marched to the British Ocean: but there vnderstanding the power of his Enemie, and finding himfelfe in want of men for Sea-feruice, hee pitched downe his Tents: and knowing Caraufius a man meet to command the Ilanders, and able to defend them against the other Warlike Nations, sent him offers of peace; the making of which is remembred vnto vs by the Coine of Caraufius before expressed, whereon are stamped the Portraitures of two Emperours ioining hands. So himfelfe returning against the Batagians, left Caraufius for Britaine, who governed the Province with an vpright and vnstained reputation, and with exceeding peaceablenesse, notwithstanding the incursions of the Barbarous. He reedified the wall (as Ninnius the disciple of Eluodugus writeth) between the moneths of Cluda and Carunus, fortifiing the fame with feuen Caftles, and built a round house of polish-

> Terminus, and not the foundation of Caraufius. But the date of his noble Gouernment was brought now to a period, by the Treason of Allettus his Familiar friend, one whom he had imploied in managing of the State, who thirsting after the Supreme Authorstie, betraied his trust, and treacherously mur dered him by a wile, putting on himselfe the Purple-Robe, flamping this his Image vpon the publike Coine as an absolute Soveraigne, and assuming the Title Imperiall, about the yeere of Christ 294.

(9) Constantius who had leuied an Armie, and was come with great speed vnto Bulloigne in France, (a Towne that Caraufius had sometime fortified and kept) hearing now of his death, determined the recouery of Britaine; and after great preparations, at length passing the Seas in a darke fogge or milt, landed his men without impeachment : which done, hee fired his owne Ships, therby to frustrate all hopes of escape Allectus, who had laien to intercept his comming. forfooke also the Seas, and meeting at vnawares with Asclepiodotus, great Seneschall of the Pratorium, as a de sperate man, hasted upon his owne death; for encountring with him, hee neither ordered his Battle, no marshalled his men, but fought at randome very vnifortunately: for having put off his Purple Garment, he was among many other flaine, when hee had held his estate the terme of three yeeres.

The Frankners and others of the Barbarous Souldiers escaping the Battle, sought to sacke London, and so to be gone; but as good happe was, the Souldiers of Conflantius, which by reason of a mistie and foggie aire were feuered from the reft, at vnawares came to London, where they refeued their Allies, and making great flaughter of the Enemie, flew Gallus their Leader, casting his body into a Brooke that then ran thorow the Citie, which thence after was called by the Britaines Nant-gall, and by the English, Gallus his Brooke,

(10) The deaths of their two V furpers, with the recouerie of the Britaines vnto their wonted obedience, was accounted to great a benefit to the Romans, that it is most glorioully commended, and R hetorically fer downe in a Panegyricke Oration alcribed to Mamertinus, in the praise of Dioclesian, Maximianus, and Constantius: where (after hee had extolled the fertilitie of the Braish Soile, and the Riches that the Empire reaped thence) he let forth the strength of the Enemy, growne to fo dangerous a head : and concluded with this Acclamation; O what a manifold Victory was this, worthing vandoubtedly of immunerable Triumphs, by which Victorie Britaine is reflored to the Empire, their Confederates rought to obedience, and the Seas secured to a perpetuall quietnesse! Glory you therefore (inuincible Emperour) for that you have as it were gotten another World, and in resto-ring to the Romans puissance the glory of the Conquest by ring to the commans pulpanee in giory of the conquest of Sea, baue added to the Roman Empire an Element greater then all the compasse of the Earth, that is, the mightie maine Occanit selfc: and afterwards now by your victories (Inuincible Constantius Casar) what soener did lie vacant about Amiens, Beauois, Trois, and Langres, beginneth to flourish with Inhabitants of fundry Nations, Yea and reouer, that your most obedient City Autum, for whose fake I have a peculiar vause to reioice, by meanes of this Triumphant Victorie in Britaine, hath received many and fundry forts of Artizans, of whom those Provinces Many Artificen were full. three hundred and fix, hee elected Cæsars, and after Angalis, which honours the last enioied not long, for he was saine as Rome by the treachery of Maxenius, after one yeere. And the other, when he had four yeeres gouerned as Cæfar, and three as Augustus in the East, died at Tharsis in Cilicia.

(3) And to the lot of Constantius, who much at one time with his Copartner, elected his fonne Conflantine, (so famous in christian historie) Cæsar, fell Great cloded Italy, France, Britannie, Spaine, Germany, and most of the Prouinces in Africke: which seeming to him (who rather chose to gouerne well then much) too spatious, gaue vp to Gallerius all that in Africke, as too remote from the Seat of his relidence, and eie of his direction.

(4) This good Emperor was for his Palenesse fur-named Chlorus, by birth a Roman, his Father named Eutropius, his Mother Claudia, Necce to the Emperor Clau-dius. Himselfe had attained the dignitic of a Senator, and was both Wife, Y aliant, Noble, and Y ertuous; whose parts Eufebius doth thus commend.

Constantius was a man of singular clemencie towards nen, and pietie towards God. He did not partake with him necognia petite vorsa as voa. It e ata not parrace with this cruellie, whose partaker he was in Soueraigntie : neither staining his Raigne with the bload of the Saints, nor despring our Churches and places of Praier, as Maximianus Jumping on Converse and praces of Prater, as Maximanus furionly did, but rather be reuterneed and highly honoured those who truly bonoured God. Maxentius as much depending upon his Sorcerers, was no leffe affired of the victory. In furtherance whereof, as a stratagem of warre, hee framed a deceitfull Bridge ouer the river Tyber, neere to Pons Miluius, to intrap Constantine: but loyning battell, and ouerlaid with strokes, retired and sled, and (whether for halle, or through forgetfulneffe) tooke ouer the same Bridge, which fuddenly failing under him, hee was with many more drowned, and Constantine remained victor. In memory whereof, hee caused a triumphall Arch to be erected in the midft of Rome, wherein his Statue was imboffed, holding in his Right hand a Crosse; according to the fashion of that which hee had seene in the heavens : and vpon ancient inscription in memory of this victory, this we finde engra-Uen: INSTINCTV DIVINITATIS, MENTIS MAGNITYDINE CVM EXERCITY SVO. TAM DE TYRANNO QVAM DE OMNI EIVS FACTIONE, VNO TEMPORE IVS-TISREMP. VLTVS EST ARMIS. Thus: By instinct of the disine power, with great magnanimitie and helpe of his armie in a lawfull warre, he revenged the cause of the common wealth, as well on the Tyrant himfelfe, as on his whole faction all at once. With the like fuccesse had he warred against the Frankners in Batauia, whose Vieforie was likewise stamped in gold, wherein is a Woman litting vadera Trophey, and leaning her head vp-on a Crosse-bowe, with this inscription, FRANCIA.

(6) But as his fame increased in the mindes of most, so was it as much maligned by Licinius his fellow Emperour and Brother in Law; who in his heart neuer fauoured the Christians, howsoeuer for a time outwardly hee fuffered their Religion: but at last, secking occasions against Constantine, hee raised a crueil Persecution in the East, where he raigned with Martinianus, whom at Byzantium, and Iulius Licinius Licinianus at Arlas, he had before made Cafars : permitting the to Rampe these monies as marks of Soueraigntie.

I icinim pur to death at Nico-modia, and his sonne after, dwo 326.

By this affliction of Gods Church, he inforced this Champion of God for their defence to prepare his forces, with which hee met Licinius in Hungarie, where he gaue him a great ouerthrow. But hee escaping to Byzantium in Asia, the lesse, ioyned againe battell, and was there taken Prisoner: yet by the mediation of his wife Constantia, had his life spared, and was confined within the citie Nicomedia; where for his treasons afterwards, he and his sonne Licinianus that somewhat survived him, were put to death. And now the peace of Gods Saints manifestlie appeared, and the progresse of the Gospell passed vntroubled.
(8) For now (suth our Gyldas) no sooner was the blafling tempest and storme of Persecution blowne oner, but the faithfull Christians, who in time of trouble and dan-ger, had hidden themselues in woods and deserts, and in secret caues, being come abroad to open fight, reedified the Churches winated to the very ground. The Temples of holie Martyrs they founded, and erected (asit were) the Banners of victory in enery place, celebrating festinall holy dates, and with pure hearts and mouthes performing the sacred ceremonies: for the which bleffedneffe, he euer after had the Attributes alcribed vnto him of most bleffed Emperour, most pious, happy Redeemer of Romes Citic. Founder of Peace, Restorer of Rome, and of the whole World,most great inuincible Augustus, Sacred, Divine and of facred memory, & e. Howbeit, for admitting these praifes, as it should feeme, he is taxed by Entropius and Victor of pride; as also crueltie for putting to death Criffus his sonne (by Minerains his concubine, whom hee had made Cefar, and permitted to stampe these monies here vnder inferted) as likewife his wife Fau-Ha, fifter to Maxentius : but others affirme that the causes of their deaths were just, though (as Paulus Orofins faith) the reason thereof was kept secret, and Zosimus doth therein excuse him as Cassodore relateth, Tubs. triput. and so doth Rusinus and Eusebius.

(9) Touching Constantine affaires in this Iland, it appeareth by the last Author, that after his Fathers death, and his owne departure out of this Country, some aspiring mind taking advantage of his absence, in other warres, perswaded the people here to withdraw their obedience. Whereupon once againe he ad-dreffed himfelfe with his Armie to the reestablishing of the Ilands Subjection : and passing (faith Eufebine) ouer into Britaine, inclosed on enery side within the banks of the Ocean, he conquered the same. The ioyfull memory of this expedition is registred to posteritie vpon his Coine fet in the entrance of this Chapter, inscribed Aduentus Augusti, and by these Letters, P. L. N. the place of the Mint to be at London.

(10) After this (faith the same Author) he began to Enfebine. compasse in his mind other parts of the World, to the end bee might come in time to succour those that wanted helpe : and when he had furnished his Armie with milde and modestinstructions of Pietie, heeinuaded Britaine, that hee might likewise instruct those that dwell invironed round about with the waves of the Ocean: bounding the Suns setting as it were with these coasts. And of the Politicall gouernment therein by him altered, let it not feeme offensiue that I, who know and professe mine owne weake fight in most of these matters, doe light my dimme candle, at the Bright-finning Lampe of that Cambon in his

Illustrious Antiquarie, who faith:

(11) About this time (laith he) as enidently appeareth by the Code of Theodosius, Pacatianus was the Vicegerent of Britaine : for by this time the Province hadno more Propretors, por Lieutenants, but in flead thereof, was a Vicegerent Substituted. And againe, Seeing that Constantius altered the forme of the Roman Government, it fball not be impertment to note fummarily in what fort Bri-taine was ruled under him; and in the next succeeding ages.

He ordained foure Prefects of the Pretorian, to wit, of the East, of Illyricum, of Italy, and of Gaule: two Leaders or Commanders of the forces, the one of footemen, the other of hor semen in the West, whom they tearmed Prasentales. For civill government there ruled Britaine, the Prefett of the Pratorium or Grand Seneschall in Gaule, and under him the Vicar Generall of Britaine, who was his Vicegerent, and honoured with the title, Spectabilis; that is not able or remarkable: him obeied respectively to the number of the Provinces two Consular deputies, and three Presidents who had the hearing of civill and criminall causes.

For military affaires, there ruled the Leader or Com mander of the footemen in the West, at whose disposition were the Earles or Lieutenants of Britaine, the Earle, Count or Lieutenant of the Saxon coast along Britaine; and he Duke of Britaine, Stiled every one Spectabilis. The Earle Lieutenant of Britaine seemeth to have ruled

The Duke or Generall of Britaine, who defended the Marches against the Barbarians, had the command of thirty and eight garrison forts, wherein their Stations kept, consisting of fourteen thousand foot, & nine hundred horse. So that in those daies (by Pancirolus account) Britaine vaintained nineteene thou fand, two hundred footmen, and cuenteene hundred horsemen, or thereabout in ordinary. Besides all these, the receiver of the Emperors Finances or publike reuenewes: the Prouost of the Emperors Trea-Sures in Britaine, and the Procurator of the Draperie in Britaine; in the which the clothes of the Prince and Souldiers were Wouen: and the Count also of prinate renewes had his Rationall or Auditor of privat State in Britaine : to Say nothing of the Sword-fence-Schoole Procurator in Bri-taine (whereof an old inscription makethmention) and of other officers of inferior degrees

(12) After the letling of these affaires, to the end that he might with the more facilitie bridle the vntamed Persians that seldome were in quiet, he remoued the Imperiall feat of his Residence into the East, for now Gallerius and Lieinius both dead, the rent and diuided state of the Roman Empire was in him united: and purposing to build there a Citie, as an eternall Monument of his name, he chose the plot at Chalcedon in Afia: but whiles they were measuring out the circuit, an Bagle scouping at the Line, fled with it ouer the Sea towards Byzantium in Thracia, to which place (the thing feeming ominous) he transferred his new foundation, and there built a most Magnificent Citie, naming it New Rome) as appeareth by an infcription of his Statue). In imitation whereof he circulated Seuen hils with a Wall for Height, Thickneffe, and Beauty, the fairest in the world: and not only erected Temples, Towers, and most stately Palaces himselfe, but by his publike Edicis, comanded all the Princes of the Empire to raife therein fome Monuments & memorable Édi-

(13) Hither also from Rome hee caused to bee brought many renowned Monuments of Antiquities. as the famous Goddesse Pallas of old Troy, the Image of Apollo in braffe of an vnmeasurable bignesse; the Statues of Iuno, Minerua, Venus, and the like : whereupon Hierome faith : That Constantine to inrich this one Citie, impouerished all others in the Empire: and other Writers which faw it in the perfectio of beauty, report it to be rather an habitation for the Gods, the the dwelling place for Earthly men. Herein also (so studious was he of good Arts) was built the Proud Palace of that Publike Library, wherein were contained one hundred twenty thousand of the chiefest Written Bookes, and in the midft thereof were the Guts of a Dragon, in length one hundred twenty Foote, on which was admirably written in Letters of Gold, the Iliads of Homer. The New Name of this new Citie lasted not long; for the affection of all men to the Founder, afforded it rather the name of Constantinople. As a trophey then of this Emperours renowne, though now a brand of infamie to another of that name, who loft it in the yeere 1452. to Mahomet the Turke : and as

(14) He drew likewise hither those Legions that lay for defence of the Provinces, as well in Germany and Gallia; as in Britaine : from whence hee brought (faith Malmeshury) a great power of British Souldiers, through whose industry and forward service, basing obtained Triumphant Victories to his bearts delire, and attained to the Empire: such of them as were past service, and had perfor-med the painefull parts of Souldiers their full time, he plunted in a certain part of Gaule Westward, upon the very shore of the Ocean : where at this day their posterity remaining, are wonderfully growen cuen to a mightie people; in manners & language somewhat degenerate from our Britaines, In which his doings, he laid open the Provinces to the irruptions of their Enemies; and is therefore by 20%mus hardly censured, as being the onely man that by this meanes first subuerted the flourishing estate of the Empire. And indeed, by withdrawing his Forces out of Britaine, the PiEls and other their wonted Enemies had the bolder and easier entrance into the more ciuil parts of this Iland; whereby ere long, being altogether abandoned of the Romans, it became a pray of Conquest to the Saxons, as shall be shewed in due place.

(15) But how foeuer his policie failed (carried (as t (cemeth) by a Diuine inspiration to leave Rome) yet is this good Emperour much commended by all Writers for his many vertues, especially to hee fo laid the foundation of the Christians fecuriof Princes over fince, ouen vnto, this day. And albeit Christianicy, that many Cafarshis fuccessors, have often attempted to shake it by their authorities, and the sharpe infruments of heretikes dangerously haue vndermined it, yet hath it borne out the Stormes of all their boifterous affaies, and stood in the strength that this Emperor first laid it.

(16) And vpon this foundation, that a glorious building might be raifed, hee congregated three hundied and eighteene Christian Bishops in the Citie Nice in Thracia, where himself was present and also President of the same Councel (though now his Beadsmen the of the fame Councel (though now his Beadfmen(the Popes) put him & his Succeffors from that right) and buffire cutf. as another Mofes, he then pacified the contentions of the brethren, and recitablished the authorities of the Bishops for the godly government of the Church in that Primitine age.

(17) But as the cleerest Sunne hath his set, and the fairest day his night, so Constantines elerious life drew to an end, though his living-glory shall be endlesse: for intending a voyage against the Persians, hee fell grie-uously sicke, and counselled by his Physitions to be carried vnto Nicomedia, a Citic in Bythinia, to the Hot Bathes that naturally there fprang (which caused some erroneously to write that he became a Leaper he died on the way neere to the place, and in great denotion commended his departing Soule to his Crucified Redeemer, Maij 22. the yeere of Christ Iesus three hundred thirty seuen, and of his happy victorious raigne thirty one, and of his age fixty five; whose body was interred at Constantinople, in the Church of the Apoftles that himfelfe had therein founded.

(18) Eufebius writing this good Emperors life, faith, that he deferred his Baptisme vntill his old age, in defire that he might receive it in lordayne, where our Sawiour himselfe was baptised. Yet others thinke that he was baptiled with his Son Criffus, what time he created him his Cafar: for the Celebration whereof, hee caused a most sumptuous Font to be made in Rome; which Platina & Sabellicus affirme to have continued to their times. And the ingenuity of the same Sabelliess is much to be approved, in that speaking of Confantines Donation, which some so much vaunt of (though the vanity of that forgery is now laid open to the view of all by fundry learned men) he acknowledgeth (himselfe being a Romanist) that he findeth no mention of any fuch matter, in any of the ancient Records which he followed, and so leaveth it to the Patronage of those Crafts-men, out of whose forges it first was formed. He left to succeed him in the Empire as Augusti, (with distaste of the eldest) his three Somes, Constantine, Constantius, and Constance, whom before he had made Cafars, & defigned by Testamer, Delmatius, the fon of Anniballinus, (his brother) Cafar and therefore we have inferted his mony in ranke of the Temple at Ierufalem, and renew their Sacrifice, remitting to them their debt of Tribute, and vowing that at his returne from Perfia he would visit that holy Citie, and (as he faith to them) ut und vobifcum in ea Deo optimo gratias agam; well beleeuing that by raifing such an opposite to the Christians, he should suppresse their increase, and annihilate their Prophecio of Ierusalems desolation. To repaire these cursed walles against the providence of Dinine Instice, Alipini of Antioch, that had beene Gouernour of Britaine was sent : but his indeuour, and the worke of all his Ministers, was interrupted by fearefull flaming balles of fire, which iffued from the Earth neere vnto those foundations, confuming very many of the Tewes and workemen; by reason whereof, this Element still gi-uing fresh assault on them, the place became vnaccesfible, and the enterprise given over: so vaine it is for Man to strine against the decreed purpose of God. Manie lawes he made against them, and manie rights of Subjects hee took from them. By Edict he forbad the Christians the publick Schooles & study torbad the Christians the publick Schooles & fluidy of the Arts and Tongues | lefting away the reafonof this insuffice with froftes, as hee did the reft; faying that Artiflest, [Pearstes, and Pearst, who must be the guides in fuch liberall learnings, adoring Mereurie and the other Gade, he held it subfurd that they flouid read and learne of their Bookes, that lootst and raile at their Pearsten.

The equitic of this extended power may appeare by Marcellinus censure, a man of his owne Religion who of it faith, Inclemens obvuendum perenni filen-tio; Let the Edict be dambd to eternall filence. When hee feized vpon the goods of the Christians, which was often, and vpon weake pretences, he vsed to inuert the Letter of their owne Doctrine, in warrant of his foule act, faying that he did it, of facilius in Regnum Calorum veniant. When hee had dilabled the Christians of all command, either in the Field or Common-wealth, (as he did Iouinian, Valentinian & Valens, after Emperours)he would say, he did it because their Gospell taketh from them Potestatem Gladij. And wheresoeuer any poore Christian implored the hand of Tustice against wrong and violence, they returned with no better redreffe, then that it was the rule of their Religion, perferre inturies, it was the dutie of their Profession to beare all iniuries. And although most Authors agree that hee stained not his gouernment with the bloud of any Catholikes, well knowing that gore of Perfecution is the feed of the Goffell; yet fome affirme that when Apolloes Oracle, neere Antioch, had loft his power of answer by the holy presence of Babillaes bodie (there martyred and intombed) and that the Chrifrians in remooning it away, fung folemnly the P falm. Let all them be confounded which worship grauen Images: this Emperour (although the Act was his direction, though not the order) grew fo inraged, that hee put then many Christians to the Sword.

Of the prudence and learning of this man there be many notable monuments remaining: for in all the courses of his life he did rather labour to content the parts of his understanding, then of his sensualitie, often being heard to fay, Turpe effet sapienti, cum habeat animum captare laudes ex corpor : and therefore writing to Eedicius, Prefett of Egypt, to helpe him to the Bookes of George Bishop of Alexandria, hee faith, Where others delighted in Horse and Hawkes, I have beene from my infancie instamed with the love of Books. As for his Misogon, (where playing with his own person and beard, he sharply reprehended the Antiochians of their intemperance in frequenting Stage-Plaies; of their impietic, in changing Jupiter and Apollo (Gods of their Forefathers) into the Christ of the Caleleans; and of couctousnesse in their Magistrates, in felling Inflice) it is one of the wittieft Inucctines extant of those middle times.

In the course of his Religion hee is by the Writers His Religion. of his owne affection and time rather reported superfirious then deuout; and his fancies therein rather to Marcel, lib. 25. them accounted ridiculous then religious. Such was the excesse and waste of Oxen in his sacrifices, that it is beleeued if his returne had beene from the Perficke Expedition, there would have beene want of them to supply his Rites, and therefore they might happily fay as the white Oxen did of the Emperour Marcus, Si tu viceris, nos perimus. Yet were his rules of order to the Priefts of his superstitious zeale, such as may well become the most religious Church-man of our age to imitate : for he prohibited those Priests from gaze of Stage-Playes, frequenting Tauernes, or exercifing Ex Iulian Epife any foule or illiberall profession, perswading them to imitate the Christians, whose bounty to strangers in distresse, charity in burying the dead, and whose humble manners and fanctitic of life (though but diffembled) had so much increased their Profession.

(6) His fortitude appeareth in the processe of his His Fortitude, Martiall Actions. At three and twenty yeeres hee was made by Constantine his nephew Cafar, matched to Marcel, Eb. 15. his fifter Helena, and fent in person to restraine those barbarous Nations that had forced in vpon the Roman Limits, But whether this imploiment was grounded vpon the Emperours owne feare to aduenture his person against these Sanages, a desire to nurture this mere Scholar his brother in law in more princely manners, who then was rude; or to expose him (in Intances, who then was ruce; or to expote num (in reject of flow feeloudy in State) to an affured perill: it remainted doubtfull. But this man then neither of opinion or hope, and who should haue seemed to haue effected a point of excellent seruice, if hee had no more but defended the frontiers, and repelled the Enemies, did by his valour performe no leffe then deeds of admiration.

Hee recourred the revolted Cities of Gallia, ouerthrowing seuen of the mightiest German Princes in one set Battle.

Hee sent to Rome Chonodomarius and Badonearius. two of their greatest Kings, as spoiles to adorne the Trophey, and attend the triumph of Conflantius. Hee forced on euery fide those to feare his power, that had so long beene fearefull to the Roman Empire. And had he returned home, borne up only with the merit of this his seruice, and opinion of the world, and not beene blowne beyond the bounds of his old moderation by a new defire, hee had escaped the imputation of ambition and treacherie, and beene esteemed a just succeffour, against whom he is deemed now an vniust vsurper. But it may be said that it was a diuine power that inspired it, and a strong hand that inforced him to it: for from aboue the Porch of his entrance, into one of the regained Cities, the Wreath of Laurell (referued an ornament of that place) fell in wonder vpon his head. As touching his election, he calleth the Gods to witnesse his vn-willingnesse, and the publike protestation he made against it at Paris, when he was there by the tumultuous Armie fa-luted Augustus. And although by the great provision made by him of Corne from Britannie, to hold a foot the Armie against the plots of Constantins (that grew now enuious of his fortune, hee may feeme to have intended the ruine of his Soueraigntic) yet doth hee by the Gods of his greatest confidence, Jupiter and the Sunne, protest, Quod Constantium occidere nunquam op-

(7) But Constanting ending this quarrell and competition by his death, Iulian, whom a Pithonist had deluded with the hope of Persia, telling him that his fortunes should be as his feature, like Great Aexander, bred in him a thirstie desire after the surname Perficus: whereupon hee prepared an Armie for this expedition, and feeking the fauor of his Gods the Moone. Fortune, and Mars, embrued their Altars with the Blood of an hundred Buls at once; though manie ominous fignes, as they were interpreted by his Philoso-phers and South faiers, forbad the same. Such was the great Earthquake happening in Bithynie, that swallowed vp the Citie of Nicomedia. Rivers likewise are saide to fland drie, euen in the heart of winter; and Springs forgetting their viuall boilings, yeelded not foorth their wonted waters : yea and if wee will beleeue the reporters; his successe was foreshewed by the departure of an Angell, and by a Meseor gliding in the Aire. All which hee fought to preuent, by pacifying his Heathenifh Gods with multitudes of Sacrifices: and with an Armie extended ten miles in length, entred Perfia, cutting afunder the Bridges by which hee pal fed ouer his men, to adde to them more of resolution, as their meanes were leffe of returne, refusing all humble fubmission and composition offred him by their King; and at the place then called Phrygia, joined Battle against Surena, a great Commander among the Persians, and Merenes, General of their Horse, ac-companied with two of the Kings sonnes, whose

Whose wit and eloquence needs no further teltimonie then the Monuments of his owne Pen; nor his religious zeale more then the Function his youth so worthily performed in the Christian Church. His Imperiall Vertues we fee match him in ftorie with Titus, in moderation with Aurelius, and for successe in warre, with Traian; three of the most excellent Princes: and his fortune was to fee bounded within his fole greatnesse, what the hand of right and fword of tyrannie had so late dispersed. But now one Errour, his Apostasie, disroabing him of all his Morall Vertues, leaves him an object naked to the vulgareie, but as a Monster of men, and marke of infamie, I hold it therefore fitting no leffe the vie, then the inflice of a Storie, to doe him (as I haue done) all his right : fince in him we learne that all those admirable endowments of Nature, embelished with all the morall and internal graces that Art could adde, are not the base of holinesse, without divine grace ; nor dalliance of Fortune, and fulneffe of Empire (that made this man wanton and forgetfull) is the center of fecuritie and happine se, without heauenly protection fince from the fense of Sacred Pietie hee fell to Pagan Superstition: for many are called, but few are chosen; and in the feat of Prefumptuous Maieflie he felt the rod of Diuine Reuenge. No sooner was he clad in the Purple Robe, but one louinus (a Roman Ensigne-bearer, lately at vari-ance with this new Elected Emperor, then a private man) fearing the danger of so powerfull an Enemie stepped now about the degree of the common fort, revolted to the Persians; and having good accesse, in-formed King Sapores of the death of Iulian, (to them till then vnknowne) and dilabling toutanus for an Vnskilfull and Effeminate Captaine, both incouraged the Enemie; and gaue directions how to take the aduantage. The Persian as ready to execute as ioyous to heare, set forward his forces, his Elephants leading the way, whose terrible brayings and fearefull approach much affrighted the Roman Souldiers. A fore battell was fought, and fountaines of bloud drawne from the fides of both parts: wherein, with an infinite number of Persians, Iulianus, Macrobius, and Maximus, three Roman Tribunes, of those Legions that then were the Principall of the whole Army, were flaine : in regard whereof, and especially for want of Victuall, (whose scarsitie then was such, that for one Pecke of Meale, ten peeces of Gold were given) Ionianus made Peace with the Persians for thirty yeeres, giving them fine Provinces beyond Tigris, some Cities and Forts in Mesopotamia, whereof Nisibis is named for one that Chejopotamus, whereou regions is named for one that had been the very finewes and strength of the Confines, euer finee the Warres of Antibridates: for which his doings, he is taxed by Europius and Annianus (who both lived in his dairs) and of most the deed is held very dishonourable to the greatnesse of the Roman Empire: howbeit divers others excuse him very justly, confidering the extreame mifery and famine wherein Iulianus left the Army, which was in apparant hazard to be giuen ouer for a pray to the Enemy, to the indangering of the whole Empire, had it not been thus preuented: and therefore they highly commend

(5) At his departure from Persia, hee visited the CitieT as fas, where he caused the Sepulcitre of Islian (though otherwise he had found him auerse both in Affection, and Religion, yet for that hee was his preceding Emperor) to be richly adorned: and taking Antioch in his way for many daies together was troubled with fome accidents, which that age did take for minous signes. For the Statue of Maximianus Cafar, standing at the entrance into the Kings Palace, let fall the Ball or Globe out of his hand, no force mouing it: horrible founds and noises were heard within the Confistory: and Blazing-starres appeared at Noone- A Blazing fter

Thence therefore in greatt hafte he marched, and at Ancyra, declared his sonne Varronianus his Casar, a veric Infant, whose Wrawlings and vnwillingnesse to ride in the Imperial Chariot, portended (faith Amianus) that which after happened. For hafting still rowards Constantinople, he came to Dadastana, a place that di-uideth Bithynia and Galatia asunder, and there died suddenly of the obstructions and stopping of the Lungs, caused by the dampe of a new mortered Cham- Sabelliess. be wherein he layor (as others write) by coales there fet to dry the new feeling, whose vapors hauing no isfue, fittled him to death, the seuenteenth day of Feiffue, third thim to death, the fewencemth day of Fe-bruary, the yeere of the worlds redemption, three hundred fixtie foure; after hee had raigned feuen moneths, and twenty two daies, aged thirty three yeeres.

Resently vpon the death of Iouianus, by a secret whifpering and runnig rumor, Equitius, Tribune of the Scutarij was nominated Emperor, a man naturally rigorous, and rude, and therefore difliked of the better adulfed, and no further followed. But fro him, their voices turned to Ianuarius, a kinfman to the last deceased Ionianus, at that present Gouernor of Illyricum. But he also resected, V alentinianus, then abfent, was Elected at Nice, as a fit and meet person for the managing of their Warres, and good of the Weale

(2) His birth was of Pannonia, in the Citie Ciba las, of meane and poore parentage; the sonne of Gracian spoken of before, who by trade was a Rope-seller. but of great strength; and therefore by scruice preferred to places of account, and had been made Ruler of Britaine. His owne life likewise was spent in service of Warre, and was ere-while a Captaine ouer the Targatiers: but Iulian requiring him either to Sacrifice to his Gods, or to leave his place; he chose rather to lay aside his Belt then his Faith and Christianitie, as likewife Iowianus had done; and so for neglecting a little honour then, he had now a farre greater bestowed on him by the disposer of all Earthly Kingdomes. The Estate so vrging it, he made Valens (his Brother) Partner in the Empire, the trumpets every where founding warres throughout the Roman World. For the Almans inuaded Gaul and Rhetia, the Sarmatians and Quadi made Spoile of Pannonia: the Pitts, Saxons, Scots, and Attacots infested the Britaines : the Austorians made roades into Africa: the Gothes ranfacked Thracia, and the Perfians entred Armenia. For which cause, Valens remained to defend the East, and Valentinianus tooke his progresse into the West, where in three Battels vnder the conduct of Jouinus. hee discomfitted the Almans:

(3) But in Britaine things prospered not so well: for by the generall bandings of the foresaid Nations, their old Enemies, the Province was fore distressed and brought to extreame misery. For Nettaridius, Admirall of the British Fleet they slew, and Balchebaudes Lord Warden of the Marches, by a traine of these barbarous people, was forelaid & affailed on euery fide. The intelligence of which occurrences, when it was brought to Rome with great horror, the Emperor first the state of the s led away, had not the hap to see the wished successe. Then Ioninus, famous for his Warres in Germany, came into the same parts; and seeing the puissance of the Enemy, ineant to crave aid of the Auxiliarie Forces, the vrgent necessitie requiring so much : at last, in regard of many (and those searefull) accidents, which rumor continually reported, touching the state of this Iland, hither was deligned Theodossus, a man esteemed most happy, and approued for his Martiall prowesse, who with a bold resolution and select power both of Horse and Foote, fer forward for Britaine.

ture, casting with himselfe many projects, which poi-sed Fortunes Scales alike: but lastly by certaine Captines and Fugitiues hee learned that those Companies of sundry fierce Nations, spread so farre and diffusedly vpon the face of the Province, could not be vanquished, vn-lesse it were by sleights and stratagemes. By Edicts therefore he first proclaimed impunitie to such as had forsaken their Colours, if they would returne; whereby many which had run to the Enemie, or at their owne pleasures had beene dispersed into divers parts, came in, and by their countenance declared their resolutions in his behalfe. Notwithstanding, minrusting the euent, and penfiue still with cares, hee thought good to call to his assistance Civilis, a man of great underflanding, quicke spirit, and withall an vpright Institute, who was to rule Britaine as Deputie, and likewife Duleitim a Captaine, renowned for his skill and deedes of Amianus Mer lib.18,cap.7.

(6) After Confulcation with them, having gotten courage, and departing from Augusta with a power of Souldiers, which in his politike industric he had leuied and trained to his hand, hee brought exceeding great succour enery where vnto the troubled and confused state of the Britaines, gaining before hand fuch places in each part, as might give advantage to annoy the barbarous Enemie; and enioined the Common Souldiers no service, whereof himselfe tooke not the Affay with a cheerefull heart : in this fort performing as well the Offices of an Active and hardy Soul-dier, as the carefull charge of a right-noble Generall, he discomfitted & put to flight divers Nations, whom infolent Pride (fed with fecurity) had incited and fet on fire, to inuade the Romans Territories; and so restored wholly vnto their former state the Crites and Cafiles which had fuftained many loffes, and eftablished a fure peace for a long time following.

(7) Now there happened whiles he atchieued

these exploits, a dangerous matter likely to haue broken our into great mischiese, had it not beenequenched in the very beginning of the enterprise: for one Valentinus of Valeria Pannonia, a man ora proud spirit, first Deputy Leintenant and after president, for some notable offense banished into Britaine, as Frontinus immediately before had beene, as one impatient of rest, like some noisome wilde Beast, vpon a certaine fwelling pride, rose vp in commorion against Theodofins, whom hee perceived to be the only man able to withftand his wicked designes. Howbeit, casting about many waies, both closely and apparantly, as the gale of his vnmcasurable desire rose higher, he solicited as well the banished persons as Souldiers, promiling (as the time would affoord) rewards to allure and draw them on to some actuali attempt. Yet when the day came wherein it should have beene effected, Theodofius having intelligence thereof, furprifeeted, Theodofius having intengence united, and placed administ with fome few of inward complices, believe a Reaccordingly. But in his militaric skill and policie, (wherein hee was reputed to haue exceeded all men liuing in those daies) gessing at future dangers, hee pet Warriour. inhibited all Inquisitions to be made touching the rest of the Conspirators, lest so generall a feare surprising at once, and fpread abroad among many those tempefluous troubles of the Proninces, which were now well allaied, fhould reuiue againe,

(8) Therefore turning himselfe from this busineffeto the reforming of fuch enormities as were of most consequence, now that all dangers were quite ouer-blowne, hareedised the Cities, repaired the Garison Castles, and fortified the Frontiers with standing Watches, and strong Fore-fenses. And thus having recourred the Province againe which had yeelded (ubiection to the Enemies, he reduced it vnto the pristine Estate, so as by his meanes and motion it had againe a lawfull Gouernour appointed, and also named it V A-LENTIA, in honour of Valentinianus the Emperor. Palentie

(9) The Areans, a kinde of men (as witnesseth Amianue) instituted by those of ancient times for politicke imploiments, who by little and little were fal. len into disorders and vices, he remooued from their Stations, as being manifestly connected, for that (in-duced with the greatnesse of rewards received or promised) they had divers times discovered vnto the Barbarous what focuer was done or debated betwixt the President and his Counsell: for indeed their charge was to runne to and fro by long journies, to intimate and make knowne vnto the Romans Captaines vpon the Marches, what doings and stirres were among the Neighbour-Nations; whereby they had great opportunities both to know and reueale the fecrets of the

(10) And thus Theodofius having managed most excellently these affaires, was sent for to the Emperours Court; who leaving the Province over-ioied for their Peace, was no leffe famous for his many important Victories, then was either Furius Camillus, Or Papinius Curfor. And being honourably accompanied and attended vnto the Narrow Seas, with the heartie loue and fauour of all men, departed, and with a gentle gale of winde passed ouer, and came to the Princes Campe, where (being received with ioy and praise)he succeeded in the roome of Valens Ioninus, who had the conduct of the Horsemen. For these his Martiall deeds so happily atchieued, in honour of him there was a Statue crected, resembling a Man of Armes on Horsebacke, as by Symmachus may be vnderstood, thus speaking to his sonne Theodosius : The Author of your indred and flocke, Captaine Generall both in Africke and Britaine, was (among other ancient Titles) confecrated by the most honourable Order with Statues of Knighthood. And in his commendations, Claudian with full note thus poetically lang:

And therefore in this furious discord of the Elements, the surface of the world being couered, represented strange and wonderfull fights: Among which s. Ierome reporteth, that there

marrieth Justine, by whom he had

lacianus, the Eldest Sonn of Valentinianus, by his Empresse Seuera, was made his fathers Collegue in the Empire in the fourth yeere of his Raigne: notwith-flanding fix daies after his death, his second Sonne Valentinian , a Childe of Foure yeeres old by the ad-

uice of the Counfell and generall confent of the Camp. was also stiled and proclaimed Emperor. These Brethren lived in much love, and ruled in the West, as their wick Valens did in the East, of whom wee last spake. And albeit Graeian had cause of displeasure, that this his Tounger Brother was thus advanced without his allowance; yet he as a Prince kind and naturall, regarded his Brother exceedingly, and brought him up in all tenderaffection, forgetting the wrong offered vn-to himselfe and his owne Mother for Valentinians mothers fake.

(2) The Mother of this Valentinian was Iustina, a damfell of an admirable feature and exceeding beautie, forpassing all other women so farre, that the Empresse her selfe fell in loue with her, and vsually conuerfed with her familiarly as her equall, imparting her most private secrets vnto her as her trustie Counfeller, and often bathing together in the same Bath. Neither was her ardent affection contained within the measure of womanish modestie, informuch as she re-frained not in the hearing of the Emperour (her Husband) to extoll her incomparable beautie, preferring her far aboue any creature in the World. Whereupon V alentinianus fo farre affected this Lady, as that he tooke her to his Wife; by whom he had this young Valentinian, and also three Daughters, notwithstanding Senera was yet lining.

(3) The stormes of the Gothes as a violent tempeft beating flill against the Shoares of the Roman Prouinces , caused Gracian to beare Sayle toward the fafest Harbour, and to commit the guidance of his shippe to the most assured Pilot : their forces being so great, and their outrages so terrible, that hee thought it best not to aduenture his owner hee thought it best not to aduenture his owne person, but to imploy some other approoned Captaine. For which exploit, none was held more sufficient then Theodofius, the Some of that Theodofius who was so famous for his British Warres, and whose life was taken away by Valens the Easterne Emperour, Him he made first Captaine Generall of the Roman Em-pire, and immediatly vpon his first service against the gother, his Fellow Emperor and Augustus, allotting him those parts in the East, that his vncle Valens lately had enloved.

(4) In many Battels, fought to the last drop of bloud, this worthy Generall ouercame the Gothes, so that their King Athanarius was lastly inforced to sue Gober. for his Peace, which vpon honourable compositions was graunted, and himselfe in most princely manner entertained by Theodofius in the Imperiall Citie Con-flantinople; where falling licke after three moneths, he died, and was both much lamented, and sumptuously diction was DOM much america, and improve buried by the Emperor. Their fer eports cauled $apor, the most puilfain *King of Perfa, to fubrit himfelfe* two To teoding, and by his *homelflador, attending his Court, obtained his Amitic. Thus glorioufly raigning Court, obtained his Amitic. Thus glorioufly raigning Court, obtained his Amille. I aus gioriouily raigning, and perfect peace effablished, the ordained his young fonne Arcasius his Fellow Emperor in the East.

(5) But the affaires in the Westerne Empire proceeded nothing so fortunately: for Gracian a mecke and soft spirited man, ballanced with Theodosius, was held without regard; and V alentinian by his Prefett Probus. held both Rome and Italy at his denotion; onely Gallia obeyed Gracian. For Clemens Maximus borne in obeyed Gracian. For Ciemens Conaxming to the must rebut spaine, but descended lineally from Constantine the mustebut spaine, but descended lineally from Constantine the must rebut spaines. Great, by his affability and liberal carriage, had wonne the affections of the Britaines to fide with him; a man, no doubt, both Valiant and Wife, had he held his alleagiance to his Soueraigne Lord. But the time fitting his purposes, when the Seats and Piets with their wonted inroads, fore indamaged the Pronince, he fet himfelfe for their deliuerance, and therein sped so well, that the Souldiers by constraint (as Orosius faith) forced him to affume the Imperiall Stile and Purple Robe, And Fantu Orofini

so hasting into Gallia, with all the flower and strength well neer of the Britaines forces, arrived in the mouth Imperiall Stile. of Rhene, vnto whom also the Germans Army joyned. and now accounting himselfe an absolute Monarch, admitted victor his sonne, then Cafar, to be partner of his Empire, whose Stampe therefore with his father we have here annexed.

(6) Thus Maximus establishing his throne at Triers, Spread his wings (faith Oyldas) the one into Spaine, the other into Italy, and with the terror of his Name, leuied Tributes and Pensions for Souldiers pay, of the most fell and fauage Germans.

Jaung vermans, Againth him Gracianus made his power, but after flue daies skirmishings was forlaken of his own souldiers, and so put to flight. And now deiected and deflitute of meanes to maintaine his quarrell, hee sent Ambrofe (a great Doctor of the Church) his Ambaffador vnto Maximus, to intreat for Peace, which in outward they was granted, but was farre otherwise inten-ded, as the sequell proued. For seeking his death, he did shortly after effect it in this wise: He caused Letters, and reports to be given vnto Gracian, that his ters, and reports to be given vnto Grazius, that his Empreffe wais nourny to vitil thin, and withall fent forth a Carreck fluffed with Soulders, and with them a desperate Capsaine named Andragathius. Grazius greatly reloying for his Wife sproach, prepared himselfe to meet Haraccordingly, and opening the Litter, thinking to imbrace his Empreffe, was by the Ruffins treacheroully murthered never vnto Lyons, than band misself forms growners and linear terms. when he had raigned fifteene yeeres, and lived twentie nine. Valentinian with his Mother Instina, fearing the like conspiracies, became supplicants vnto Theodefini in the East against Maximus.

(7) He therefore preparing his forces, marched as farre as Aguileta in Lombardie, where Maximus remained both confident and secure. For having fortified the straits of the Mountaines with sufficient Garrisons, and dammed the Hauens with strength of Ships, himselfe and assisters with great boldnesse proceeded against Theodosius, and gaue him a battell before the Citie Syfeia in Pannonia, and againe most va-liantly received him in another, under the leading of his brother Marcellus; but in both of them was ouercome. From this last, he secretly retired vnto Aquileia, where of his owne Souldiers he was betraied, and deliucred to Theodesius his pursuer; and by him to the Executioner to be beheaded: of which his vnfortunate, Sabelicus Enn. 7 but deserved end, the samous Bishop Martinus Turo-like, nensis being in Britaine, did foretell him long before. An. Dom. 188. This Victory was held fo worthy and memorable; that the Romans from thence forward folemnized that day enery yeere as festinall, saith Procopius.

(8) But these Britaines that had assisted Maximus, as by Writers is recorded, did forcibly inuade Armeas by Writers is recorded, did roteinly inuade armo-rica, and there planted themfelues: From whome (high Beda, the Britaines first armied into this Iland. But fürre-ly himselse is either greatly mistaken, or else we misly amiene is entire greaty minaixen, or enewe mu-take him altogether, and that rather, for that by Ca-far those Coasts that lie vpon the Sea shoares, are cal-led Armorica, and there the Celtes search, being the Original of our Inhabitants, as is holden, and so from thece they might fpread themselves surther into these British slands, long before it received the name of Little Britaine. The like troubles fell to other Provinces at the same time, by the intestine warres of the Empire : for the Gaules were molested by the Frankes; Spaine by the Suenians; and Africk by the V andals : the East parts by the Heruli, Ostroges, and Hunnes; Haly by the Lombards, and shortly after by the Gothes.

(9) These troubles in the Proninces, caused the Emerers to call home their Armies, with Aides of their Allies, & all too little to support their own declining Estates, which now beganne to end of it selfe, and these Emperors raignes to be cut off by their vntimely

But to returne into the path of our History, from whence (by the intangled occasions of these foure Emperours raigning together) we have wandred; let vs remember what occurrents happened vpon the vs remember what occurrents happened vpon the death of Maximus the Tyrant, and hasten to end the greatness of the Empire, which in most Prouinces began to end of it selfe. For Valentinian being rid of his feares, vnto which he had beene subject; and Theodofius of his Collegue, vnto whom hee was enforced; great hope was conceined of a flourishing Estate, but t brought foorth onely the remaines of their downefall : for the one returning to Constantinople in great Triumph, liued not long after; and the other left peaceably in the Westerne World, was (as you shall heare) Soone made away by Conspiracie.

(10) Valentinian remaining at Vienna in France free from Hoffile Enemies, retained in his Court those that fought his life, whereof Arbogastes, a Captaine of a haughty stomacke, politicke, aduenturous, and of great power, but withall of a base Parentage, a stranger and an Infidell, was one; Eugenius a Grammarian, but now bearing Armes, and of great account, was abut now bearing Armes, and of great account, was a-nother. E haue declared in the life of the last preceding Emerour, the Birth and Forunes, Warres and Victories of this most worthie Theodofius, vntill the death of Maximus the Britaine. for fo most writers terme him) and now onely remaine his latter Acts in Warre and Peace to bee further related.

(2) This Emprous returning from Aquileia in Lombardie vnto Constantinople in the East, long time there stated not, but was drawne againe into the West there react not, but was grawne against into the seg-both to reunge the death of Valentinian his Fellow-Emperour fo trecherously strangled, and also to op-pose the proceedings of Eugenius, whose Coine wee have here expressed, being one of the Murderers then vsurping that portion of the Empire, sided by Arbogaftes the other.

(3) Theodofius marching with his forces towards the Confines of Italie found the passages stopped at the foor of the Alps, and his Enemies powers farre fur-mounting his: Therefore a while to deliberate on thefe bufineffes, hee pitched his Tents, and there stairice. In the meane time Engenine and Arbogastes his al-fociate had forelaid the Countrey, and hemmed him about in such a strait, that no victuals could bee

(4) No meanes being now left, but either to cleere the paffages, or bee ouerthrowne, hee first became supplicant with Fastings and Teares vnto his came supplicant wan rayings and 2 cares who his food, whom he knew to be the God of Hofts, and whom cuer he had ferued, and whose aid had hitherto neuer failed him: whereupon boldly incouraging his men, he accepted of the Field. But the Battle furioully beheaccepted of the Feeds. But the Battle turoully be-gunne, fell fore againfi him, that ten thouland of his Senditers were prefently flaine, and the reft delpai-ring ready to flet, himselfie at that inflant had been furprized, had not God turned the heart of Artifie, a Captame of his Emerica, fuddenly to come to his fide-and to refer him. Thouldown had been shall and to rescue him. Theodosius much daunted by these unfortunate beginnings, yet conceined better hopes of the following successe, trusting to the vprightnesse of his Caufe, and the helpe of his God, which still he imolored, till the Heauens were propitious to his earnest desires.

(5) For suddenly a violent tempest arose, and a ra-ging winde rushed so extreamly on the faces of his Enemies, that they were in no wife able to withftand it, the power thereof beating backe againe their darts into their owne fides; whereas the arrowes flootfrom the Emperors part, were thereby forced with double firength to pierce through the Rebels Iron plates, whereby a most glorious victory was obtained; and whetery a morgiorrous victory was obtained; and Eugenius taken, who lay grouelling at the Emperors feete, deploting his effate, and crasing his pardon; but euen as hee kneeled with cries and teares, the Souldiers standing by strucke off his Head. And Ar-Somarry Hairung by Hucke on Instream. And Arbogaties the Author of these eails by flight escaping, two daies after ran himselfe upon his sword, and so reuenged on himselfe his owne wicked actions. This victory was archieued the fixth of September, in the yeere of grace three hundred ninety fix, by Socrates account: and was to famous, that besides the Re-cords of Christian Historians, Clundius a Heathen Poet thus eternizeth the same in his Heroick Poeme.

Gods darling deare, the heavens thy fouldiers were in arms, And windes conspired to aid and follow thy allarms.

(6) Theodofius thus deliuered, repaired vnto Mil- Tombfindich Lan, where worne with yeeres and trauels, thortly after he fickened vnto death. And fending for his Son ter in inchency und custin. And lending for his Don! Ilmnin and Homorius, made him Emperor of the 1466, and to Artical and the Artical and the Ladius gaue the East, wherein hee had before made him his Gas. The Promiser of Artica he alsigned to the government by one Gidds in his Sonnes behalfe, of the government by one Gidds in his Sonnes behalfe, and in the Non-age of Areadius appointed Rufinus for Constantinople, and Stilieho Tutor to young Honorius nout of Conflex tineple. Stiliche Gouer in Italie, three most worthy men vindoubtedly, had the greatnesse of their spirits been contained within the lists of their trust and places.

(7) This last named Flavius Stiliche, famous for a long time, and an inward companion with Theodea long time, and an inward companion with a neone-fiss, had been emploied in the Britaines warres against imploied in the Language of the Scate Wandale and Picts, and there-British Warres. the inroades of the Scots, V and als, and Piets, and therein had borne himselfe with fortunate successe, as the Poet Claudian implieth, where he bringeth in Britaine thus speaking:

Me quoq, vicinis pereuntem Gentibus, inquit, Muniuit Stilicho, totam quum Scotus Hibernem Mouit, & infestospumauit remige Thetis. Illius effect um curis, ne bella timerem Scotica, nec Pictum tremerem, ne littore toto Prospicerem dubijs venientem Saxona ventus.

(8) This Theodofius for his Princely parts by all writers is ranked among the very beft of all the Emperours: And as he is likened to Trains for his feature and personage, so may he be compared in wisedome to Marcus Aurelius: In temperance with Antoninus Pius: For his Christian profession and deuotion, with Constantine the Great: and for his mecknes, cquall to any: Wherofamong many other, we have one example very remarkeable, yponan offence of mitted by the hinablaturats of The fallatines, hee commanded most fencere punishment to bee inflicted, which was fo vnaduitedly executed, that as well the innocent, as the offenders were innoluted therein. He then comming to Millar, would have entred the Church to have communicated with eather Chief. Church to have communicated with other Christians in their facred deuotions, which Ambrofe, the great Doctor, and Bishop of that See (though otherwife a man of admirable mildnesse) resisted and forbad, in which estate the Emperour stood for eight moneths continuance: and then with great humility & inertis continuance: and tinen with great humility & labeling in acknowledgeing his offence was abfolluted, and againe receiued into the congregation: For preuenting of the like rath offences by him committee the continuance of the like rath offences by him committee. ted, he then enacted a Lawe, that thirty daies should padi betwist the finence of death, and the executi-on of the Atalefattor: And to inpperfile his haity choller (whereun on he was much fubblet) his vituall manner was to receit the Greate Alphaler, before her verted any speech fauering of that humour.

(4) Thus Peace obtained by the Deaths of these two Traitors, the Third stood vp with more danger in the west. For Stilieho, Tutor to yong Honorius, thought it not sufficient honour for him to have his Daughter an Empresse by the Marriage of his Ward; but set at hazard (for himselfe and sonne) his own Conscience, both their Lines, and the fatall ruine of the Now-declining Empire. For first, sowing seditions amongst the Lieutenants of the Provinces, picked also quarrels in the Emperors Court, Cashiering with dilgraces those Gothes that had served with good proofe of their sidelitie aboue twenty yeeres, fince their entertainment by Theodofius. These to reuenge their Wrongs, chose for their Cheistainea valiant Goshe named Alareus, which fhortly proued the Scourge of Rome : with whom joyned the Vandals, Alanes, and Sueuians, who ioyntly with great fury beganne to warre in Austria and Hungarie, increasing their Powers with such Multitudes. that as Paulus Orofius, an Author of that time faith; The World was amazed and stood in feare. For ynto these Colonies resorted two hundred thousand Gothes. more, under the leading of Radagafius their King, who two hundred thousand Gorbes together with united forces, subdued all Thrasia, Hungary, Austrich, Sclauonia, and Dalmatia, and spoiled all in fuch manner, that it feemed Dinels and nor Men had passed that way, as Saint Ierome (who lived at that time)expresseth : Thefebrute Beasts (faith he) fuffered by the wrath of Godin this warre, have laid Cities waste, flaine the People, and left the very Fields bare and defolate, whereof the Provinces of Thracia, and Sclauonia, with the Country wherein my felfe was borne, beare too true but lamentable Records.

(5) The Roman Empire thus daily declining, and these shere extenses making havock where they came, the Armies in Britaine were put in great feare, left the Flames of their Neighbours fire might Flaft out, and take hold of them also. Therefore prouidently to preuent that danger, they elected one Marcus their Lieutenant for Emperor, yeelding him their obedience fome short time, and then finding his defects, immediatly murthered him,

In whose stead they Inthroned one Gracian a Briration those tine: whose carriage not answering their expectations, they Murthered also, within Foure Moneths after his Royall folemnity.

(7) Constantine prospering as wee hauesaid, sent exters of excuse vnto Honorius, affirming constantly that he was compelled by the Souldiers to doe what he did: whereby he so pleased the Emperor, that com-mending his Valor, & holding him fit, he sent him of free gift a Purple Robe. Whereuponthis new-growne blade began to bud faire, and at Arles planted his Imperiall Seat, Commanding the Citie to be called Conflantina from him, and ordained that the Assemblies Jamina from him, and ordained that the Altembies of the affaires of Seuen Promines: should bee therein held, But this his Sunfine of prospertie was soone ouercast with the Clouds of aduerse fortunes, and his Crowne & Life laid together in the dust For in Spaine against him was arreated Maximus a Vasfall, whose Geagams mm was arreaced as aximus a r ajau, whole co-merall Gerontius intercepting Constant, (his Some and Cafar) at Vienna in France slew him: and Constantine himself within the Walles of Arles, besieged for Foure Moneths, after the Raigne of Foure Yeeres, laid aside his Purple Robe, and entred the Church in Order of Priesthood, furrendering the Citie with his Stile Imperiall, was laftly led into Italy, and there be-headed.

But Rome at this time being fore afflicted, and by Alaricus with his Gothes and V andals presently facked, Honorius fent for Victorinus with his Army out of Britaine, to the rescue of the Citie, as Claudian fignifieth, when he reckonoth vp among other Aides, the British Legion sent thither : whereof the Scots and Picts had soone notice, and (according to their wonted manner) with fire and fword molested their neigh-

(10) The Britains therfore resolutely engaging themselues into dangers, tooke Armes, and freed their Cities and States from those Barbarous People: by whose example, the rest of their Nation in Armories, with the Provinces of Gaulois, delivered themselves also from their oppressions, and all of them cast out the Roman Presidents, settling a forme of Commonwealth to their owne liking. But these our Britaines growing too weake to withfland the continuall inroades of their Northerne Exemies, humbly belought Honorius for succour; whose returns of comforts confifted only in words, exhorting them by Letters, to fland upon their owne Guard. But they knowing it was not words which much helpe them, againe deplored their miseries,& so obtained of him the assistance of one Legion, which in their aid droue backe those Affailants into their owne Marches, and fortified againe the wall betwixt the Frith of Edenburgh vinto Cluid: fo then departing, left the Britaines to defend themselves; who now, besides the Common Enemies so often mentioned, were much molested, and their Faith corrupted by one Pelagius, by birth a Britaine by profession a Monke, by leand doctrine an Heretike, who was brought up in the famous Monajtery of Ban-

But the Arch-heretike returning into Britaine, began againe obstinately to maintaine the same, together with Notwithstanding, at the same time flourished Fastidius, a most learned British Bishop, and Chrysanthus also the Deputte or Vicegerent of Britaine, who with great honor gouerned the affaires of the Church and Common-wealth, and was afterwards (as elfwhere we have shewed) made Bishop at Constantinople of the Nouatians against his will.

(11) Thus were the affaires of this Land managed under these Brethren Emperours ; the elder of which, death and Areadius, died in peace at Constantinople, leaving his fonne T heodosius, a childe of eight yeeres, to the succession of the Empire, and to the tuition of Hisdigerdus King of Persia; a matter which seemed at first very dangerous, but prooued at the last very profitable. He raigned thirteene yeeres, and died the first of May, the one and thirtieth of his age, the yeere of Christs birth foure hundred and ten. At which time one touinus, of an obscure beginning, had raised some Tumults in Gallia, stiled himselfe Emperour, vsurped the Purple Robe, and stamped his Coines with the Title of Victorie, as is seene in one which we heere present.

(12) Against him Honorius made his power, and with his little loffe flew the Ppflart in the Field: wherby his fame was more spread in the West, though not so fortunate as his brothers was in the East, after whom hee liued fifteene yeeres, and with whom hee had raigned other thirteene; and he died, faith Paulue Diaconus, of an infirmitie at Rome, in the yeere of grace death and foure hundred twenty foure, leauing no iffue of his body to fucceed him in the Empire.

These nual incurrons made apone where they dame. I neget times (lath Ninius) were full of feares, and were prolon-ged with forty yeeres afflictions: wherein V origern then king was troubled with the violence of the Romans, the dreads of the Piets and Seets, and the oppositions of Aurelius Ambrofius, who furniting his flaine Parents, that had worne the Imperial Purple Robe, fought their reuenge upon their wicked Murderer: befides the Intrusions of the Germane Saxons, called in for Friends, but prooued indeed the greatest Enemies. During the conflict of these tempestuous stormes, some finall comforts were ministred vnto the Britaines by Bishop German his presence, who from France assisted them against the Pelagian Heresies, and the perillous affaults of the Seats and Piets, who in divers skirmishes ouercame them

(2) These dolorous times of Britaines destruction. Gildas the mournfull Historian, who lived not long after, doth declare. hands (onely in hope to gaine a little fustenance of food for the present) and for many yeeres after left lamentable tokens (faith Beda) of great defolations wrought by that dearth: yet with those other which were of more noble and refolute spirits it produced a better effect; insomuch as fro out of the Mountains, Caues, and thicke woods, they affailed their enemics, Britainte trafting repoling their trust not in Man, but in God, whose help in God,ouer-come their ene-mies, is then most at hand, when mans helpe faileth. These in many skirmishes gaue them the ouerthrow with much flaughter, and that for many yeeres together, when they made their incursions for bootes and fpoile; which caused these Rauening Irish to returne home, and the Pists a while tested from further molestation. Notwithstanding the Britaines returned not from their owne wickednesse, growing strong now daily in repressing the Enemie, but stronger in their owne sinnes and civill dissensions. By meanes whereof, though a furcease of Hostile Warres was imbraced, and the skarres of famine cleerly skinned vp, yet another fore as dangerous as either, secretly bred, and shortly brake forth. For the Land being free from the Enemies wastes, yeelded such plenty and abundance of all things, as the like before no age had seene; and therewithall such riot and excesse, that the peoples fins grew to a plentiful haruest, as by the words of Gyldas is apparant.

(5) Certainly it is heard (faith he) that there is fuch formication, as the like is not among the Gentiles. Truth with the maintainers thereof is hated : Lies with the Forgers thereof highly eftermed. Euill is entertained for good. leaudnesse respected more then uprightnesse, darknesse de-sired before the bright Sunne, and Satan accepted for an Angell of light : Kings then were anointed, not according to Gods liking, but fuch as excelled others in cruelise; and as cruelly againe by their anointers were they murdered not for any demerit, but that they might advance others more sauage then the former. If hee were milde, or inclining to truth, the darts of hatred were on enery side levelled against him, as the onely Subuerter of the Britaines Estate. What was pleasing or displeasing to God, was all one with them, saving that the better things commonly wrought most discontent: so that rightly the saving of the Prophet, which was tenounced unto the people in old time, might bee applied to our Countrey : Yee lawleffe and corrupt shildren have forsaken the Lord, and prouoked unto wrath the holy one of Israel. Why should ye be smitten any more, still multiplying iniquitie? Eury head is ficke, and every heart is heavy : from the fole of the foot unto the crowne of the head, there were contrary to their safetie, as if that medicine which was bestowed by that truest Physitian of all, was needlesse for the world. And not onely the prophaner fort did this, but also the feletted flocke of the Lord, and the Shepheards thereof, who ought to have given example to the whole people. To speake of drunkennesse, numbers of them lay sense-lesse and weltring in wine, swelling with pride, contention, and griping enuie, putting no difference in iudgement be-tweene good and euill: insomuch that it seemeth contempt was powred forth both upon Princes and people : and all of them seduced by vanities, wandred in errors and by-paths, not lead in the right way. When Gol therefore was minded to purge his Familie, and to recure them thus infected with terly, and to inhabit (as earft they did) the whole Countrey from one end to another. Yet all this could not reclaim: them, but like unto mad horses, which taking the bit fast betwixt their teeth, runne away with their Riders, fo thefe leaning the way which leadeth (narrow though it bee) unto faluation, ranne at randome in the wide way of all wickednesse, which leadeth directly to death. Whiles therefore (as with words, he is scourged for a foole, and feeleth not the whip: for loe, a pestilent contagion fell heavily upon this foolish people, which (though the enemies sword was gone) in short space destroied such multitudes of them, that the liuing were not able to bury the dead. And indeed the time now drew Britainei inineere, wherein their iniquities (like as those in times past of quitic, the Amorites) should come to the fulnesse. And even at that times decaied Ruines haue stopped the Passage of those small Springs iffued from the first fountaine of Nations beginnings, and have diverted their streames far from any fure Courfe, or certaine known Heads; so the originall parent, place, and name of our English-Saxons, have bin writte with a pen of flight touch vpon the leaues of oblinion, or elferecorded in those obscure Roules, that as yet lie bound up in the Office of Times forgetfulnesse: whereby it rests doubtfull from what root these branches first sprang; doubtrul from what root their orances nut prangs fome bringing them from Africa, fome from Meedon, some from Demarke, and some without all likelihood from Britaine it selfe.

Ocea Scarlensis a Frislander borne, affirmeth these Saxons to come of Saxoa Prince of India, who with his two brethren were banished by lot to seeke their destinies abroad, their owne Countries being pestered with ouer many people at home. These (saith he) following Alexander the Great into Greece, became Progenitors to their Countries, that from them receiued their of-springs and names; as that from Frise the eldest, his Frisanders descended; from Saxo the second, the Saxons vpon the River Albis, and from Bruno the yongest, the Inhabitants of the Dukedome of Bruns. wie. And of this opinion also Sufridus Petri Gemeth to be. Crantzius doth deriue them from the Cattiin Germany, and the Phrygians a Region in Afia; to omit others, who would bring them from Sage the brother of Vandale. (2) F. Albinus a learned Author, doth thinke the Saxons to bee descended from Saca, a people in Afia, and that afterward in processe of time they came to be called Saxons; as if it were written Sax-sones, as much to fay as The formes of the Sace. To this opinion Mafter Hemy Ferrers, a Gentleman of ancient descent, great reading, and a indicious Antiquary agreeth; whose judgement for my particular, I have alwaies honoured, and from the Progeny of his English Monarchs have taken my principall proceeding in these Saxon Successors.

(3) As touching the ancient place of their aboad. Ptolomie the Alexandrian placeth the people Sasones in the Inner Seythia, betwixt the Mountaines Alani & Tapurs; and Amianus Marcellinus fiteth the Saca (no doubt the very same) a fierce and sauage Nation, to inhabit overgrowne places, commodious onely for cattell, at the foote of the Mountaines Afcanimia and Comedus, neere unto which the Citie Alexandria, Tribatra and Drepsa were adiogning, and are fo fet by Ptolemie. Neither is it leffe probable that our Saxons descended from these Saca in Asia, then the Germans from those Germans in Persia, of whom Herodotus writeth. And Infeph Scaliger, a re-nowned Author, sheweth, that these words fader, moder, brader, tutcher, band, and fuch like, are at this day found in the Persian tongue in the same sense, as we vie Father, Mother, Brother, Daughter, and Bound, &c. a great inducement (as somethinke) for the Saxons originall from those parts; though in my opinion the Latine, Pater, Mater, Frater, have no leffe affinitie of found, and in all likelihood were the Primitiues to these of ours. Of these Sata, Strabe writeth that they made inualions into Countries lying farre off, as namely Armenia, where they left the memory of their successe in a part of that Country, by calling it Sacacena,after their owne name.

(4) From these parts of Asia, as Seythia and the rest. one Band of them, confifting chiefly of their Youth, proceeded by degrees into Europe, and possessed the Nesse, or Forland, which the Romans called Cimbrica Cherfonefus, being at this day the continent part of the kingdome of Denmarke. In which place they were first knowne by the name of the Saxons. And here also they among themselves beganne first to be distinguished into other Tribes, as Holt-Saxons (for so Verfegan, out of their old Chronicle, faith they were called) for their keeping in the Woods: but more proSzen July

But before Pratomic we finde them not mentioned by any Author, who flourished in the daies of Antoninus Pius, about the yeere from Christs Nativity 140. And most certaine it is by Eutropius and Beda, that before the yeere three hundred, Beda. when Disclesian swaied the Roman Scepter, the Saxons Samusfearefull out of Cimbrica Chersonesus fore offended the coasts to the Roman of Britaine and France, with their many piracies, and were fearfull euen to the Romans themselues. And that their Name was fo gi-uen them from their Weapons, some allege their accuftomed manner in wearing thereof, which viually was to trusse the same ouerthwart their backes when they went foorth to battle; whereby notice was taken, and that name attributed vnto them, as the like hath been vpon like occasion vnto others; for so in Asia the Seythians were named for their skill in shooting in France the Picards for their long Pikes vied in fight; and in Ireland the Galloglasses, which bare the Pollan as their principall weapon: and of latter times, upon lesse occasions haue Surnames growne both to particular men, as also to whole Societies; which may appeare in such as having vowed their voidge and service for Ierusalem, wore continually upon their backes a red Crosse, whereby the name Crosse-backe, or in old En-Crone, wherevey the name Croffe-backe, or in old En-glish, Crowch-backe, was to them attributed: in which ranke, Edmund Earle of Lancafter (fecond Sonne to King Henry the third) was a principall, and thereby got that name, which he could not claw off from his backe euer fince. So likewise those men who entred that Religion of Monasticall life, wore vsually vpon the outlide of their Garments the figne of a Crofe whereby that Order was diftinguished and noted from others by the name of Crouched or Croffed-Friers. But whence or howfoener the name arofe, among all the Germans there were none in reputation for militarie deeds comparable vnto these Saxons : neither had any adventured by Sea and Land to farre to pur-

Sexeca in lib. de chase renowne and praise, or perhaps (and that more likely) to supply their owne wants; ranging often from place to place, as men alwaies ready to enter any action : and in Germanie to this day a great Dukedome retaineth from them the name of Saxonie. (9) The Guta (no doubt the Inta) Ptolomie like-wife placeth in the Iland Scandia, lying very neere the The place of the Juse Saxons in-Coasts of Germanie, vpon whose vttermost Promontorie (as faith an ancient Manuscript) the Intes did for certaine inhabite, which onto this day of the Danes is called Intland. These intes, Gutes, Getes, or Gothes (or as Beda calles them) Vites, gaue names to those parts of Britaine which they inhabited, as to this day the Ile of Wight beareth their impression. This variety of names we will no further inforce, then that these Gothes were not the same that had passed I fter by Pontus Euxinus, and ouer-ranne Europe, who were also called the Get.e John Maior, Verflegan Reftit. by Iohn Maior. Their name, as Verstegan will have it, was taken from their agilitie, or fwifine se of foot: and some of them (as Sebastian Munster declareth) went and inhabited among the Mountaines that divide

Germanic road nature where upon their name grew to be called the Hill-View, which are now the Heluctians.

From hence (faith Henriche Hon. Ress Rantzonius) the Saxons, who were also called the Angle-Saxons, went to aid the Britaines. And at this day there is a little Province in the Kingdome of Dania, named Angell, beneath the Citie Flemburge, which Lindebergus calleth Little Anglia. Their fite notwithstanding is placed by most Authours in westphalia, where the Citie Engern standeth, and where Taitsu and Ptolomy Citic Engern Bandeth, and where T actus and Froomy rangeth them among the Sueutans; which in their times might very well be. Others would have them in Pomerania, where the Towne Englows doth formerwhat found their name: 16 doc Engelskim, Suglewars, and Englernte, places in Germania, bear winnelle, and Words of affinit are prints of their footing among the Longobards and Suemans. But the most glorious remembrance of that their name hath beene for these many ages in this their name natu neene for tneie many ages in this Kingdome of England; though Sext Grammatitus (as eastern we routched, Lib.s., Cap.2) will needs have Anglid uses in amed from Anglid the fonne of Humblus, and Giant-like brother of Dansut the first King of Dennart. But howfoeuer, most certaine it is that these Angles stole the name of this blessed Hand from their elder brethren the Saxons (as Iacob Gen.27, did the birth-right from Esau) and called it after their owne; as wee shall further shew when our Historie

THE MANNERS AND CVS-TOMES OF THE ANCI-ENT SAXONS.

CHAPTER III.

Tacit, in defeript

Hele Germans, and among them the Catti and Sueuians, (our Ancestors according to Albertus Crant. zius) were a people (laith Tacitus) well set, sterne of countenance, tall of stature, gray eied, and of a firie a pect, and their haire vellow Vnto whom, Witichindus

Their beads and beards they suffer (laith Tacitus) to grow at length, and ne-uer put off that vowed ornament and bond of valour, vn-Tacit.descript.of till they have staine an Enemie : but then upon blood and spoile, they uncouer their forehead, and say they have paied backe the price of their birth, and thinke themselves worthy of their Country and parents. Their curled locks (faith he) they binde up in knot, and standing on end, tie it in the crowne only that is the harmle sleene they have of beautie, to seeme more terrible to the Enemy. And by Sidonius Apollinaris his testimony, they vsed to shaue off the haire of their heads, referuing onely a tuft in the crowne, about which they worea hoope or plate of copper, which caused the haire to stand vpright, as by

In English thus:

There doe we fee the Saxons clad in blew, Bold on the Sea, but fearefull now on land: Their heighted tops upon their crownes that shew, Are not content to hold their wonted band, But raifd in tufts, where all the rest, doth stand Barenaked shau'd, and hath no haire at all, Which makes full fac'd, but heads seeme passing small.

(2) And that they were indeede bold vpon the Seas, Egyfippus witneffeth. The Saxons (faith hee) 4 most valorous kinde of men, excell all others in Piracies. In imitation of whom, Ifidore affirmeth, that for their

valour and nimblenes in seruice they had their name : A people (saith he) stout, hardie, and most valiant, and sarpenja (satti ne) jibus, narate, and moje valtant, and sarre out-firipping all others in Piracies, seemed more sar-full to luse on Land then at Sea. Whose intrusions and sudden violence both France and Britaine with great dammages felt: for in Gallia they seized into their posfession the Country of * Baiota ses, as is to be seene in Gregorius Turonensts, who thence termeth them 3axones - Baiocassiens : and in Britaine an Office of Charge was instituted to defend the Coasts from their irruptions, the Captaine wherever was a compared to the coasts from their irruptions, the Captaine wherever was a constant of the coasts from their irruptions. tions, the Captaine whereof was commonly called the Count or Earle of the Saxon Shoare : of whose Piracies and fauage Cruelties, let vs heare Sidonius in his Epiftle to Numantius complaine: So many Rowers as you see (saith he) so many Arch-Pirates thinke you behold, they all of them together so command, obey, teach and learne, to rob and steale. There is no enemie so cruell as this, that etteth wpon others at wnawares, and as occasion serves, as warily slips himselfe away. Hee setteth at nought such as encounter him: hee bringeth to nought those that take no heed of him: whom he cour feth, he furely ouertaketh: when he flieth, he is fure to escape. To this service, Shipwrackes mure him, they terrific him not. Be there a Tempest up, the fame ferueth them, and to a saile others. They never weigh Ancour upon the enemics Coasts, but with a resolution agame to returne : and their manner is to kill enery tenth Captine with a lingring and delorous torment: for to such Vowes they binde themselues, and with such Sacrifices they discharge their Vowes againe, being indeed not so much purified by such Sacrifices, as polluted with Sacrilege: and the bloudy and abominable Murderers thinke it a religious thing, rather to terment a Prisoner unto death, then to set him free for a Ransome.

But when wee shall heare these vnhumane and barbarous reports either of the old Britaines or these sauage Saxons our ancient Progenitours, let vs neither be offended at Gildes, or at the reports of these other forrain Writers, who spake thus of them as they were then Heathens, and knew not God: the time of whose ignorance seeing God regarded not, as the Apostle teacheth, let vs acknowledge with due thankes the goodnesse of a most gracious God, who hath brought vs to a holier conversation, and hath made vs Judges of those sinnes in them, that we might slie them in our

The Man and Womans attive differd in nothing, faith he, fauing that the women vie linnen Garments trimmed and interlaced with purple, and without sleeues, their armes bare, and bosomes naked and uncourred. Yet Paulus Dimen in their Paul Discon, aconus speaking of the Longobards, comparing them to the Saxons, saith that their Cassocker were large and worne loofe, most of linnen, trimmed and set out with very broad Gards or welts purfleet, and embrodered with fundry colours, and the richer fort with Pearles: their haire bound up in a copper hoope, flood in tufts upon the crowne, the reft curled and falling downe upon their flooders: their beards they kept skill uncus, till they had killed an enemie; and for another note of ignominie, they were an Iron Ring; as a signe of bondage, till they had cast it from them by the Conquest of a Man. Hee that abandoned or lost this shield in battle (saith Tacitus) was debarred from their publike Sacrifices and Assemblies, the greatest from their phouse sacripees and Allembites, the greately diffrace that could be; for overy shame and griefe whereof, many, many times hanged themselises. And upon these Shields their manner was to lift up their new elected

(4) For Warres, the Germans by Tacitus are reputed the best, who for two issuared and tenyeers beld tack with the Romans. Not the Samnites (faith he) not the with the common. Are the Spanisher (all time) not the Carthagenius, not the Spanish or the Gallois, no not the Parthians base so much troubled vs: for what can the East objects against vs. faining the death of Crassus, when he had adoptated Across, before roaden downed by Praisidus? But the Germans bassing either states or taken Carbo, and Cassius, and Scaurus Aurelius, and Seruilius Cepio, and M. Manlius, haue defeated also fine Consularie Armies, and Varus with three Legions in Cafars time. Nei-ther haue C. Marius in Italie, or Iulius in Gallia, Drufus or Nero, and Germanicus molefled them at home in their Country, but to their more smart. And yet these Saxons among those valiant Germans were accounted Saxons among more valuant common were accounted the beft for courage of minde, strength of body, and enduring of trauell, as Zostoneo saith. Terrible also they were, and full of agilitie, by the report of crossus: and for their sudden invasions, most fewered of the Romans, saith Marcellinus.

Their westpons, as tellificht I sammer pa-meius, were long Searers; broad Strond Landers. certaine. Their weapons, as terrine in Tournes Po-marius, were long Speares, broad Swords, and the Crof-bow: these they held in such esteeme, that with a borse furnished, Shield, Sword, and Launce, their Virgins were received in mariage, accounting them for the greatest Their Ceremobonds, and the very Patron-Gods of Matrimony: which custome might well bee taken from their neighbours the ancient Saracens, whose Maidens viually presented to their husbands a Tent and a Speare, in way of Dowrie at the entrance of their Nuptials. And among these Germans those Martiall habiliaments were in such vse, that they did meet neither at Feafls nor in Councell, but in their Armour.

A People (faith Tacitus) whom thou canst not so easily perfrade to manure the ground, as to prouoke the Enemie, and adventure wounds; holding small esteeme of that which is gotten by the fweat of their browes, when it might have been obtained by the expense of their blond. A strange di-werstile (saith he) that the same men sbould so much lone floth, and hate quietnesse. It is with them a great shame for their Prince to be ouercome in Valour; but for any one to returne aline from that Battell wherein the Prince is flaine, a perpetuall infamie and reproach. And that their resolutions were euer noble, and their corage not daunted in distresse or bondage; it well appeared by a whole band of them taken by Symachus and deligned for the Romans paltime of Sword-plaiers, who the same morning that this spectacle was expected, strangled themselves rather then they would ineurre such infamie and basenesse, as to make others pattime with the ignominious vlage of their owne (6) Their Lawes were seuere, and vices not laugh-

(o) I here Lawes were seuere, and vices not imagnife at and good Customes of greater authority among them, then elfewhere were good Lawes; no temporing for fauor, nor offers for gaine; but bounteous in bolystaity, and liberall in gifts, accounting both due to bee ginen nad vectored, year and that without thanks: no Nation from from adultations of the control of th terie, or punishing that some more searcely. For the woman offending, having full her haire trust off, was turned starke naked out of her Husbands house, and that in presence of her owne kindred; thence she was scourged with whips thorow the Towne, without regard of birth, beauty, age or wealth, and neuer after could finde another Husband. Those that were vinnaturally leaud of their bodies, their manner was to drowne them in filthy mud, and to couer them with hurdles. Yea and greater punishments then these the Pagan-Saxons executed vpon fuch offenders, as by the Epiftle of Boniface an English-man, Arch-bishop of Epithe of Baniface an Englishman, Arch-bishop of Asquare, which he wroce ware Stelledad King, of the Marcians, in reprocuing his adulterrous life, in manifoli. For (liath hee) in the actions Campy of the Saccost (where there was no knowledge of Gab) of cities a Maddin har father handle or one bassing a bankwale became a where, flee found bet from feet with a manifolia with the round hands closed to manifolia and the Corrupter found bee banged upon the First wherein flew started. And their seuere Lawes a long time remaining in the daies of Christianitie, doe declare with what rigor (without regard of person) they both examined and punished this offense: whereof that of Queene Emma, the mother of King Edward the Confessor, is a suffici-ent example, who being accused for incontinencie of body with Alway Billion of Winchefter, was inioined to passe ouer nine Plangh-share trons glowing red hot, she being blind-fold and bare-footed; by which triall, fhee is faid to have acquitted her felfe, infomuch that having paffed them all before thee knew it, cried and faid; O good Lord, when shall I tome to the place of my purgation? This punishment beginning in these Pagens, and continuing vnto the yeere 750. Stephen the Second, and most pontificall Pope of Rome, did veterie abolish, as too fenere and oner-rigorous for Christians

So that the testimony of Salaianas, which lived among them, fitteth well our purpose, saying; Though the Saxons are outragious in cruelty, yet for chastity they are to be honowred.

(7) But as in these vertues they out-stripped most Pagans ; fo in the Zeale of their heathenish superstirions and Idolatrous feruice, they equalized any of them : for befides Herthus, the Mother-Earth, whom the Angle our auncestors accounted for a Goddesse of Aide: they worshipped Mercurie vnder the name of Hhh I Woden

The Images of all these they still bare before them in battle, reputing no small condence in their aides: and yet (laith Tagtus) they thought it unbeseeming to paint their Gods in the shape of men; hauing even by Nature doubtlesse written in their hearts, a regard to that demaund of the Lord : Towhom will ye liken me that I should be like him, John 2 to whom while income inm 1 poma be the mm, faith the hole one lehous? (8) These Superstitions, Ethelward even in his daies complained of That they had infected the Danes, dares computance over Loss use, rose on engine Losses, Normans and Sueuians, with the worship of this God wooden; unto whom those barbarous Nations offered facrifices, that they might be victor ious where they fought. And as Craniz recorderly, Herald the forth of that name, and Norwaies King, was so farre over gone, that he sacrificed two of his Sonnes unto his I dols, that he might obtain nees two of ms somes who ms tout that he might obtaine a tempelf to differfe, and put backe the Armado, which Herald King of Denmarke had prepared againft him. This generall defection of Gods true worling, Adam Bremensis maketh mention of in this manner : In Temple, faith he, called in their vulgar and native speech I tempre, MILLIER, causes to their muyer and nature speech V bjola, which is made altogether of Gold, the people wor-hip the Statues of three Gods, in such manner, as that I hav the mightiest of them hathonly a Throne or Bed: on either hand of him Woodan and Frisco hold their places. And thus much they signific: "Thor, say they, beareth rule in the Aire, and governeth the Thunder and Lightning, Windes, Aire, and governor to a tempor and Ligitime, virials, Showers, Faire weather, Corne, and ruits of the Earth. The second, which is Woodan, that is, stronger, maketh Warres, and ministreth manly valour against Enemies. The Warrs, and ministreth many valour against encours. Lie-third is Frifco, believing largely open mortali men, peace and pleasure, whose smage they deutife and pourtray with a great virile member. Woodan they engrave armed, like as we ofe to cut and expresse Mars.

(9) Their controuerlies and doubtfull matters were decided by drawing of Lots, which they cuer made of some fruit-bearing tree, and was performed after this manner: If there were publike cause, the Pricit; if private, the Goodman of the house, or worthsest in the company, tooke those suited slips, dissinguished with certaine markes that had beene cattered at hap hazzard upon a man ses som man occur junice an emp immonara upon a white gament: and after praires and innovation on their God, with eise fixed upon heasen, and three times lifting the fame lots aloft, gaue their interpretations thereof according to the markes therein inferibeds which was received in the markes therein inferibeds which was received. and between for a most fine to racte: as the like was obter-ued vpon other occasions, both by the inspections of Brasts intrals, and singings of Birds, after the accustomed maner of other Gentiles, that doted vpon the augurations for things of future successe.

(10) For the generall gouernment of their Countrey they ordayned twelte Noblemen cholen from among others, for their worthines and sufficiency: These in the time of peace rode their seuerall circuits to fee inflice and good cuftomes obserged, and they often of course at appointed times met together, to confult and giue order in publike affaires: but euer in time of warre one of these twelue was chosen to be King, and so to remaine so long onely as the warres lasted : and that being ended, his name and dignitie of King also ceased, becomming againe as before. And this custome continued among them, vntill their wars with the Emperour Charles the Great: at which time wittekind, one of the twelue aforelaid, a Nobleman of Angria in Westphalia, bore ouer the rest the name and authoritie of King; and he being afterward, by means Verstegan Restit. authorite of Amegianton coung anterward, by means of the faid benefour, converted to the faith of Chrift, jadby him his mutable Title of King turned into the enduring flile and honour of Duke: and the eleven others were in like manner by the faid Emperouraduanced to the honourable Titles of Earles and Lords, with efablishment for the continual remaining of these Titles and Dignities vnto them and their heires. Of whose descents are since issued the greatest Princes at this present in Germanic. But though they obserued this faid forme of government elfewhere, yet

(11) And thus much out of my poore readings, I haue observed of the original beginnings, the names, maners, and customes, of our ancient Progenitors, the worthy Saxons, without either amplyiying or impayring their glory: who being of all the Germans io much denouted to warre, as that their only fame therein was many times sufficient to daunt the Enemy, were thought vpon by the downe-cast Britaines as the fitteft to support their ruised Effate, of whose Entrance Conquests, and Kingdomes, wee are now next addressed to speake.

Ien the state of Britains was miserablie torne by the calamities of civil Diffensions, Famine, Dean, and Robberies, the Romans returned, their owne Strength decased, and their Afflictions daily augmen-ted by their wonted Enemies the Scots and Piffe

no hope was left to their despairing hearts, that of themselues they were able to defend themselues: and therefore (as wee haue shewed) they called to their aid the Saxons, a Nation sierce and valorous, who to all the Saxons, a valuou nerce and valorous, who to the number of nine thouland, under the Conduct of Heigiff and Horfs, two brethren, entred Britaine at Ebyliest in the Ile of Thanet, in the raigne of Theodolius the lecond, and of Yalentiman the third, Emperor of the East and West, about the yeere of Grace 450. Receined they were with great joy as Angels from Hea-uen, and faluted with fongs after the accultomed manner of the Britaines, who appointed them the Iland Thanes for their habitation.

(2) These saxons in short time made proofe of their Manhood. For ouercomming the Enemieeuen in Sotiand it felfe, feated themfelues in some part thereof; so that their Conquest feemed absolute, and the Britaines freed from their former assaults. Laurence Archbilhop of Canturbury, he was at length connerted from his Idolatry and incessuous Matrimony, and being baptized, indenoured to maintaine the state of the Gospell. He married Emme, the daughter of Theodebert, King of Austrasie, now Lorragne, by whom he had iffue a Daughter named Enfwith, who died a Virgin at Fulkestone, a Religious House in Kent of her Fathers foundation; and two Sonnes, whereof Ermenred the elder died before his Father, and left issue Dompnena, who was married to a Mercian Prince; Ermenberg that died a vailed Virgin, Ermengith a mention; Ethelred and Ethelbert, both murthered by their Cosin-german, King Egbert. His younger Sonne was Ercombert that succeeded him in the Kingdome. This Edbald built a Chapell within the Monasterie of Saint Peter and Paul at Canturbury, in honour of Mary the bleffed Mother of God, endowing that Church with sufficient maintenance; wherein, after the continuance of twentyfoure yeeres raigne, he was buried neere to King Ethelbert his Father, Anno

E Recombert, the Son of Edbald by Emme his Wife, succeeded his Father in the Kingdome of Kent in the yeere of grace 641. He was a vertuous, religious, and Christian King: for the Temples of the Hea-then Idols he suppressed, and commanded the fall of Lent to bee observed. His Wife was Sexburg, the daughter of Anna King of the East-Angles, by whom he had issue Egbert and Lothair, both Kings of Kent after him; Ermenhild, Wife to Wolfere King of Mercia, and Erkengode a professed Nunne in the Monastery of Saint Brigets in France; where the died, and was interred in the Church of Saint Stephen. In his daies the flate of the Church growing to a well letled forme of gouernment, the Prouince of Kent was divided into Parishes by Honorius the Archbishop, as restific the Records of Christ-Church in Canturbury. This King having raigned twenty foure yeeres and odde mo-neths, died in the yeere of our Lord 664. Egbert, the clder Sonne of King Ercombert, in the nonage of his yong Nephewes, Ethelred and Ethel-bert, (the sonnes of his Vncle Ermenred) obtained the Rule of Kent, and had not their murther much blemished his peaceable Gougrnment, hee might well haue held place with the worthieft of those Kings; but thirsting after an absolute soueraigntic, and searing left his owne power should dimmish by their growths and rightfull successions, he set his mind on that blondy, traiterous, and vnnaturall attempt, and with the assistance of one Thurne, found fit place and opportunitie to worke that diuellish designe, casting their bodies into a River, that so their Murthers night not be knowne. But God (faith Malmesbury) that fearcheth the heart, reneiled the act, by casting vp their bodies on the shore, and to the open view of the next Inhabitants, who with great reuerence there buried them, and built a small Chapel ouer their Monument, whose bones afterwards were remoued, and new interred in the Abby of Ramseyin Hantshire. The Lady Dompnens their Sifter, and next Heire to the Crowne, that was married to Merwald, a Prince of Well-Mercia, and borne him foure Children, founded the Abbey of Miniter in Kem: Wherein, faith Store, the became the first Abbesse her selfe, and Mildrith her daughter succeeded her therein, faith Capprane. For notwithftanding Egbert left issue Edrik and Wigtred, (asis faid) yet Lothaire taking the advantage of their minoritics, and the example of his brothers intrusions, made himselfe King against his, as he had done against the Sonnes of Ermenred, but did not inioy the same with the like peace as he had done. For not onely Ethelred the Mercian warred strongly against him, but also Edrik, by the assistance of the South-Saxons cotinually fought to recouer his right, whereby the peace of the Kentifb was much molested : and lastly, in a bloudy battell was Lothaire shot thorow with a dart, whereof he died, under his Chirurgeons hand, the fixth day of February, in the yeere of Christ 685. after hee had Beda bis. But doubtleffe there are many opimons of this mans first entrance and new erected eftate : for some (as M. Sauile in his Table) set it in the second yeere of Hengists first arrivall, Anno 452.

Others in the fecond of Aurelius, and no leffe then thirty yeeres after that, Anno 482. Harrison will haue it forty three yeeres after the Saxons first entrance, and fourth yeere after King Hengist his death, Anno 492. And M.Ferrers in his Succession of the English Monarkes, placeth it in the three and twentieth yeere of King Hengifts Kingdome, and in the fifth af-ter his owne arrivall, the yeere of our Redemption 488. Dispath (by some called Eiselposs and Atherwood) fucceeded King Cissa in the kingdome of the South-Saxons, and was the first Christian of that Nation, converted by Bilbap Wilfride, as some conceive out of Beda: yet Beda saith expressy, that the King was baptized before Wilfrides comming. And the History of S. Swithune faith, it was done by S. Berinus, Bifhop of Dorchester, who usually preaching the Gospell in the king-dome of the Mercians, in the Citie of Oxenford, and predome of the Mercisso, in the Citical Occupied, and pri-ference plumphens King of America, in hapsed that King of Mercinold, then a Legan, was profest, who by the indu-num of p alphens, and influentiation of Bernium, received at the laster of Bayrillow, whom alf Walphens received at the Font for the Godforms, and in give of their adoption game with him true Provinces, to be convected to hely forms ling. done, that is to fay, the Ile of Wight, and the Promine of As amures in liewelf of England; at which time also Beri-nue by King Athelwolds permission, baptized the chiefe. Dukes and Nobles of that Prominee. His Queene Ebba was baptized in her owne Ile, the Pronince of the Viccians, being the daughter of Eanfride, who was brother to Eanberes, and both of them Christians. But it is generally held, that King Edilwach gaue vnto Wil-fride the Peninsula (as the Latines speake) of Scoleson, now Selfee in the West, with the demaynes of eightie feuen Tenements, wherein he built the Monafteric that bare the same name, and was his owne Episcopall Sea. (4) Berthun and Authun, two Dukes of the South-Saxons, maintained the Warres and defence of their Country against Ceadwald, and by manly valour forced him to retire. These Captaines betwixt them held the dominion of that Prouince, vntill fuch time as Ceadwald had gotten the Kingdome of the West-Saxons; who bearing in mind the remembrance of his former proceedings, and thinking to inlarge his owne Kingdome with the subsection of the South-Sakons, entred againe that Prouince, and in Battell flew Duke Berthun, harrying the Country milerably before him. But who foeuer shall compare the times of the forefaid Kings, Wulpherus and Athelwold together, will eafily finde, that it is not eafie to finde the certaine concurrence of times, in affaires so clouded in obsen ritie, and so farre remote from our present times.

He fite of the East-Saxons Kingdom, was the Country of Esex, Middlesex and part of Hartfordfhire, and the Circuit fo far as the Diocesse of London now extendeth. It was bounded on the East with the Ocean; on the South with the Thames : on the West with the Colne; and on the North with the River Stowre. The Kings thereof claime their descent from Prince Woden, not as all the rest of the Saxon Kings, but onely by a collaterall line; and Erchenwine became the first King, which neuerthelesse he held as Feodarie to the Kings of Kent. For which cause, it seemeth that Malmsbury mentioneth him not in the Catalogue of those Kings, but maketh his sonne Sledda the first, and tenth in descent from Woden.

Enne of Bedes, the some of signifuger, the son of Sneppa, the sonne of Awpig, the sonne of Supig, the sonne of Seasoned, from whom all these Kings fetch their originall: His Kingdome began about the yeere of grace 527, and in the fifteenth of Eske the fecond King of Kent; and his raigne long, but yet without any memorable acts; dying in the yeere 586. and leaving his sonne to succeede in his place.

Sigebert the little, the fonne of Seward, the fecond fonne of King Sebert, entred his raigne ouer the kingdome of the East-Saxons, the yeere of Christ 623. of whole affaires, little matter is left for vs to relate, fauing that hee hauing both a Brother and a Sonne, yet his Kingdome was fucceeded by neither, but by one Sigibert, his Cofen-German once remooued, Sigibert, the sonne of segebald, the brother of Sebert, the sonne of King Sledda, and of Ricula his Queene, fucceeded his kinfman in the Kingdome of the East-Saxons. This Sigsbert reduced againe his Prouince vnto the embracing of the Christian Faith, being daily instigated thereunto by Ofwie King of Northumber land, and received Baptifme himselfe at the hands of Bifhop Firman, and at the place called The Wall, procured vertuous Cedda to be his assister for the plantation of the Gofpellin his Kingdome. He was murdered by two of his kinfmen, who, as Beda faith, were Brethren, no other cause mooning them, but his ouermuch lenitie and clemencie. He raigned by the forefaid account, fixteene yeeres, leaving iffue a young fonne named selved, that succeeded Seofred in that Kingdome.

Withelme fucceeded his brother in the Province of the East-Saxons, nothing being mentioned of his life or raigne, besides his Baptifine by Biflop Cedda, and that his God-father at the Font-flone was Edelwald King of the East-Angles.

Sighere, the sone of Sigebert the little, entred his raigne ouer the Kingdome of the Easth-Saxons, the yeere of our Lord 664, and was the eighth King of that Prouince, in part whereof Sebba his nephew raigned, with better commendations then Sigehere at his beginning had done; for Beda reporteth, that you a great mortalitic and plague, to appeale the wrath of his Gods, Sighere became an Apollata, and for looke the faith of Christ, wheras Sebba continued constant with those in that Prouince vnder his Jurisdiction: vet by the diligent care of Wulfere King of the Mercians, Sighere and his people were reclaimed, throwing downe the Temples and Alters erected to Idolatrie, and opening againe the Christian Churches for the Saints afsemblies, that so (saith hee) they might rather die in hope of the Refurrection, then wallow in finne, and liue in Idolatrie. His wife was Ofwith the daughter of Edelfrith, King of Northumberland, whom Capgraue maketh a Saint, and Abbeffe of Berking necre London, euen in the daies of her husband.

Ebba, the Brother of Segebert the Little, and Sonne of Seward, (as we have faid) fucceeded as fole King in the Province of the East-Saxons, and with much Wil Malmbury.

equitie and administration of Iustice raigned therein thirty yeeres: towards the end whereof, the better to prepare his mind for contemplation, he relinquifhed his Princely Robes, and put on the Habit of Religious Profession in the Monastery of S. Pauls in London; as Radulphus de Diceto, with others affirme. Wherein this penitent King luing a while in fasting His latter ends and praiers, died the yeere of Christ 693, whose body was intombed in a Coffin of Gray Marble, the Couer copped, and as yet standing in the North wall of the Sabba his Coffia Chancell of the same Church.

Angl. then to be wrought, or now of vs repeated, were it the separate of muscle, not to point at the blindnes wherein euen good men were then led; and thus it is: They having prepared a Tombe-stone, to lay his body in, found it too short by the quantitie of an hands bredth, and hewing it longer, yet would not ferue: therefore they minding to bow up the knees, laid the body therein, and fuddenly it lengthned of it felfe with more then was fufficient. But furely howfoeuer this tombe was then fet on this Monkish tenter, it is now since shrunke againe in the standing, and exceeds not in measure sine foot in length. His wife (but vnnamed) hee likewife instigated to leaue the momentanic pleasures of princely State, for that which is permanent : which thing with much adoe he laftly obtained, leaving her to follow him in his vertuous denotions, and his two fonnes to succeed him in his kingdome.

Sigherd, the Sonne of King Sebba, whom Beda ma-keth a Monke with his Father, followed him also in the succession of the East-Saxons Kingdome; the time of whose entrance is set in the yeere of Christs Incarnation 694, and his death in 701, no other men tion being made either of Acts, Wife, or Issue.

Sefrid, the Sonne of King Sebba, and Brother to King Sigheard, either joyntly raigned with him, or fuccessively after him, of whom I finde nothing mentioned worthy inferting, having had neither Wife nor issue that are recorded.

OFfa, the Sonne of sighere, and of Queene of with his Wife, a man noted for his comely feature and fweet countenance, succeeded King seefrid in the Kingdome of the East-Saxons, the yeere of grace 701. Ringdome of the Esys-Saxons, the yeere of grace 70 1. He both enlarged with buildings, and enriched with lands the goodly and beautiful Church of Westumsses, but after he had ruled eight yeeres, being moued with a supposed religious deuotion, hee abandoned Kinefwith his wife (the daughter of Penda the Mercian King) his lands, kinne, and Country, and with Kenred King of Mercia, and Edwine Biftop of Worcefter, went to Rome, where he was shorne a Monke, and in that habit died, leaving his Cosen selred to succeed in his kingdome. His wife Kinefwith after his departure, (with the like penancie) vowed her felfe a vailed Nunne in Selred, the Sonne of Sigebert the Good, who was much there of or his onermuch elemence, attained to the Kingdome of the East-Saxons, in the yeere of grace 709. His raigne was long, though his acts are little spoken of, either that others worther affaires filled the pens of those Story-writers, or that his time was so peaceable and vnactively spent, that it mini-fired not matter whereof to indite. Heerzigned 18, yeeres, and died Anno 746, without relation either of Wife or Children.

Sthred, after the flaughter of Selred, was made King of the East-Saxons, which title hee retained, An. for feare whereof, Kedwald, partly inclining to this wicked purpose, reuealed the same to the Queene his wife; which a friend of Edwins hearing, rold him of his danger, and wished him to flie. Edwinethus perplexed, with troubled thoughts in the dead of the night, what to doe, fate solitary vnder a tree in dumps, musing what was best to be done; to suspect and flie from Redwald, that had honoured him so much, he held it a wrong; and to thinke himfelfe afe in other Provinces against fo powerfull pursuers, he thought it was vaine. Thus dipowerium purmers, nernougarit is was vaine. 1 Just al-fracted in calling what way might be faiteft, find den-ly approched a man vnto him, vterely vnknowne, who after faituation, demanded the cause who hee fare ario vnicasonable at time, in so vnocouth a place, and penfine manner? Edwine thinking him to be his Edwine his and deathf-man, refolutely answered; It nothing concerned him at all, either to aske, or to know his citate. Oh Edwine (faid he) thinke not but that I know thy The manthew forrow, and the cause of thy sitting thus vpon that some, thy death is pretended, and even at hand: but him. what wouldest thou give to rid thecof that danger, and to make King Redwald thy affored preserver? Any thing, quoth Edwine, which is in my power. But what shall be his reward (said the other) that shall set what he would thee vpon the throne of thy Kingdome, and that with fuch glory, as none of thy Progenitors euer attained vnto? I would bee thankfull to that man, faid Edwine, in all things, and at all times, as reason required, and of right lought. But tell me Edwine, faid he, what if the same man show thee a more safe way to spreserue the life of thy soule, their either thou at this save his soule, present knowest, or any of thy Parents euer heard of; wilt thou confent and imbrace his counfell? Yea, faid Edwine, God forbid that I should not bee ruled by him, that thus should free me from this present danger, fet me vpon the throne of a Kingdome, and after these great fauours, should also teach mee the way to an eternall life. Vpon this answere, laying his right hand on Edwines head, he said vnto him; When these things shall in order come to passe, then call to minde this time, and what thou hast promised, and so vanifhed from his presence. The young Prince thus left betwirt hope and despaire, his friend that had fore-

frid thine enemy. Which shortly he did, and slew him, as we have faid. as we mate faith.

Edwine thus placed upon the Princely Throne, his first Wife Queenburg being dead in his exile, received in marriage Ethelburga, surnamed Tace, saft name for a woman) the Daughter of King Ethelbert, and Sifter to Edhald King of Kent, a most chaste and vertuous Christian Lady, whose teacher was Paulinus, and both of them Gods instruments for the Conucrison of the Northumbrians to the imbracement of Christian Religion. But because we shall have occasion to speake of this Edwine as he was Monarch of the Englishmen. we will referue his Acts, I flues, and Raigne, to bee further related in the course of his Succession. Hee was flaine in battell against Cadwall King of the Britaines and Pands King of the Arctions, when he had profper roully raigned feuencene yeeres, the welfth of Orbitor, Anno 63; and was burded in Saint Peter; Church at Streamfail, after called Whitely, V pon whole death, the Kingdome of Northmorberland was againe

Hee warred, but with great loffe, against Edilred King of Mercia, neere vnto the Riuer of Trent, wherein his younger brother Elfwyne was vnfortunately flaine, to the great griefe of both the Kings, the one being his owne brother, and the other his brother in law by mariage: whereupon a peace and reconciliation was made. But Egfred being by nature of a disquiet disposition, inuaded the Irift, and destroied those harmelesse and filly people, which (as Beda faith) had beene great friends to the English. Their refishance consisted chiefly in cur-

fes and imprecations for reuenge, which though they could not open heaven, yet (faith hee) it is to be beleeucd, that for their cause he was cut off the next yeere ensu-ing by the Picts or Red-shankes, against whom he prepared, contrary to the aduce of his Counsell, and by them was Saine among the strait and waste mountaines, 20. His wife was Cuthburga, the fifter of Inas King of the West-Saxons, as by the time may bee gathered, from the computation of Marianus, and the Annales of the Engles-Saxons; who vpon a loathing wearinesse of wedlocke, sued out a dinorce from her husband, and built a Numery at Winburne in Dorset-shire, where in a religious habit shee ended her life, and hee by Kenred and Ofricke, leaving his Kingdome to them that wrought his death.

CEolnulph, the brother of Kenred, after the death of King Ofrike, was made King of the Northumbrians; which Province hee gouerned with great peace and victorie the space of eight yeeres: but then forsaking the Royall Estate and Robes of Maiestie, put on the habit of a Monke in the Ile of Lindesferne or Holy Iland.

These were the daies (faith Beda) wherein the acceptable time of peace and quietnesse was embraced among the Northumbrians, who now laid their armour aside, and applied themselues to the reading of holy Scriptures, more de-sirous to be professed in religious houses, then to exercise feats of warre, or of Armes. For not only Pricits and Lay men vowed and performed Pilgrimages to Rome, but Kings, Queenes and Bifhops also did the like : so great (so blinde I might say) a denotion was in their hearts, and so holy a reuerence held they of the place. Vnto this King Ceolnulph, the faid Venerable Beda (a Priest in the Monasterie of Peter and Paul at Werimouth decre vnto Durham) a great Clerke, and Writer of the English Historie, dedicated the same his Worke, which he continued till the yeere feuen hundred thirty one, dome of Northumberland, and ruled the same with the like peace and pierie, the time of twenty yeeres; and then following his example, also forsooke the world, and shore himselfe a Monke, as divers other Kings in those daies had done, whereof simon Dunelmensis writeth, and noteth their number to bee eight : as Inas King of the West-Saxons, Ethelred and Kenred Kings of Mercia, Sigebert King of the East-Angles, Sebbi and Offs Kings of the Esst-Saxons, and Ceoloulph and this Egbers Kings of the Northumbrians. These for saking the world (as they tooke it) left the Charge that God vpon them had imposed, whose authoritie in earth they swaied, and wherein they might much more haue aduanced Gods glory and Christs Gospel, then for a more easie and private life, not warranted by his word; but rather difliked, and perhaps foreshewed by those heauenly creatures the Sunne and Moone.

which in those daies were fearefully darkned, and for a time feemed to have loft their light: for Anno 733. 1 8. Calend, Septemb, the Sunne suffred so great an Eclipse, that the earth seemed to bee ouer-shadowed as with fack-cloth, And Anno 756.8. Calend, Decemb. the Moone being in her full, appeared both darke and bloudy; for a Starre (though there be none low-er then the Moone) feemed to follow her, and to deprine her of light: but passing before her, shee againe recoursed her former brightnesse. This King Egbert had a brother that bore the same name, and was installed Arch-bishop of Yorke, where he erected a beautifull Libraric (a worke well befitting a Noble Prelate) and plentifully stored it with an infinite number of learned bookes. His fonne was Ofwalph, that succeeded in the Kingdome.

O'Swulph, when his father Egbert had put off the Robes of Maicftie, and clad himfelfe with a An.Do.758 Monkes Cowle, ascended the Throng of Northumberland, and fate therein only one yeere: for before hee had made attempt of any memorable act he was traiteroully murdered by his own fernants at Mikilmongton, the ninth Kalends of August, leaving the Crown vndisposed of vntill the Nones of the same moneth in the next veere.

Dilwald or Mollo was then made King of Northumberland, and with great valiancie defended his Subjects. Some fay, that at the end of fix yeeres hee refigned his government; yet others affirme his raign to be eleuen yeeres, and lastly that hee was slaine by Alured his Successiour.

A Lured, the murderer of his Lord and Master, be-ganne his raigne ouer the kingdome of Northum berland, the yeere of Christs Incarnation seuen hundred fixty fiue, and continued the same with such dislikes, that hee laftly was expelled out of the Prouince by his own subjects, & enforced to abandon the same He was the fon of Tanwin, the fon of Bienhom, the fon of Bofa, the fon of Ailrick, the naturall fon of ida, the first King of Bernicia. And the sonnes of this Alured were Ofred, afterwards King of Northumberland, and Alhnud, flaine by the Danes, and canonized a Saint. EThelred, the sonne of Mollo, was advanced to the Regiment of Northumberland, and in the fifth yeere of his raigne, was driven out of the same by Edelbald and Herebert, two Dukes that warred against him; who having discomfitted and slaine his Generall and fouldiers in a fierce battel, so weakened the hopes of King Ethelred, that he fled his Country, and left the Kingdome in a miserable estate, through the dissensions of those ambitious Princes.

A Livald the brother of the forelaid King Alered alpiring to the Soueraignty of the Northumbrians, ruled the fame in great Justice, to his worthy commendations: notwithstanding the wickednes of his people was fuch, that without all guilt he was traiteroufly murthered by the conspiracie of Sigs, 23. EThetred the sonne of Mollo, reuoked from exile An.Do.794, wherein he had liued the space of twelve yeeres, Eshelved. was againe restored to the Crowne; but he minding the iniuries that his Lords had formerly done him, fought the reuenge by their deaths, as also to establish his Throne the furer, flew Alfus and Alfuin, the fons of Alfusald, as wee have faid, the right heires to the or Alpuala, as wee naue land, the right hence to use Crowne, and inticing offed the former deposed King into his danger, commanded him to be put to death at Cumburge, the fourteenth of Suptember, and yeere of Christ seven hundred ninety two. This Chelred raigned the space of eight yeeres, and died the yeere of grace seuen hun-dred and fifteenth: whose body was buried in the Cathedrall Church of Lechfeild.

Thelbald, after the death of Chelred, was made King of the Mercuss, and Monarch of the English, the An. Do., 716, yeere of Christs Incarnation seven hundred increase. He was a Prince giuen to peace, but withall a most laschious Adulterer : insomuch that Boniface Archlaterious Acouster: Informed that soniface Area-bishop of Ments wrote his Episle vnto him in repre-hension of the same; which tooke such effect, that in repentance of his soule facts, hee sounded the Mona-sterie of Growland, driving in mighty Piles of Oake into that moorish ground, whereon hee laid a great and goodly building of stone. He was the son of Alay, and goodly ouncaing or none, rie was the ion of Atay, the elder lonne of Eappa, the ficcond some of King Wibba, the brother of King PenJa: and raigned fortie two yeeres, in the end whereof he was flatne in a batterior of the was fl tell fought against Cuthred King of the West-Saxons, at Secondone, three miles from Tamworth, the yeere of Christ, seuen hundred fiftie fiue, and was buried at Repton in Darby-shire, having had neither Wife nor

He in- oga. larged his dominion upon the Britaines, ouercame the Kenijh in a battell, put to flight the Northumbrians, and vanquished the West-Saxons: the East-Angles also he seised upon, after he had murthered Eshelbert their Residue VPOIS atter the had mort meter unique to the King. He raigned thirty nine yeeres, and died at offer, the nine and twenty day of tudy, the yeere of our Lord feuen hundred ninetic foure, and was butied without the Town of Bedford, in a Chapell, now swallowed up by the Riner owfe. He was the son of Thingfryd, the by the Kluer Onle. Effyde, the sonne of great offs, was by him made King at his returne from Rome, being the only joy of his parents, and heire apparant to the Saxons Mo-Befryde, narehy, vpon which he entred the day after his fathers death, and lived himfelfe but a hundred and fortie daies after, deceafing the seventeenth of December, in the yeere of our Lord God seven hundred ninety six, having had neither wife nor iffue that wee reade of, and his body honourably interred in the Church of the Monafterie of Saint Albanes, founded by Offa.

King, was the sonne of Cuthbert, (as the Monke of Worcester deriues him) the sonne of Bassa, the sonne of Kenrowe, the sonne of Kentwin, the sonne of Kenwalk; the sonne of Wibba aforesaid, and succeeded King Egfryd in his Dominions. But of this Mercian Monarch more shall be written in the succession and time of that his gouernment. He raigned two and ome of the raigne ground of the raigned two and twentle years, and deceased the years of our Lord eight humbered and ninetern, and his bodie interred in the Monalkeris of Nienkounbein the Countie of Gloseffer, being of his owns foundation, His wife was Agente Ellium (in the Monalkeris of Nienkounbein the Countie of Gloseffer, being of his owns foundation, His wife was Agente Ellium (in the Monalkeris of Nienkounbein the Countie of Gloseffer, being of his own the Nienkounbein the Nienkounb fryde, the daughter (assome suppose) of offa, who Jyjan, the daughter (as some suppose) of offs, who had beene betrothed to Ethelbert King of the Eafl-Angles, flaine by her father; by whom he had iffue, Kendon, Quendred, and Burgemhild, of whom more following.

ting, he flew the innocent King, whose vertuous inclination promifed great hopes, and whose harmlesse yecres had not attained to any worldly guile. His bodie hee secretly buried vnder a bush, and (if we will beseeue the Golden Legend, where his life is described) was thus found out: A white Doue (which belike had feene the deed done) and had got it ingroffed in a scrole of parchment, posted therewith to S. Peter in Rome, and vponthe High Altar laid it to bee read, where in the Saxon characters thus it was found: In Clenc kon bad Kenelme Kinbanne lied vnben whonne, heaved bepeaued : that is, At Clene in a Cow pafture Kenelme the Kings childe lieth beheaded under a thorne. But most true it is, that an obscure sepulcher the body had at the first, and howsoeuer found out, was afterwards with great honour and ceremonie translated to the Monastèrie of Wincheombe, which his father had foun-ded. The murderesse Quendrid, for griefe and shame of so wicked an act, ended her life, without the attai ning of her ambitious defire, and hath left her name indeleblie stained with his innocent bloud.

Ceolwulfe, the brother of Kenwolfe, and vncle to An.Do.820. was elected their Governour by the Mercians : but his glory was not great, nor his raigne long, being still disquieted by Bernulfe, that fought his Crowne; and after one yeeres Regiment was expulsed by his people, and left the same to his pursuer, abandoning the Countrie for the lafety of his life, One daughter hee had, named Eifled, who was the wife of wigmund, the fonne of withlafe, the substitute King of Mercia, and himselfe the last that held the Mercian Kingdome in a

BETMIFE obtaining what hee folong defired, made himselfe King when Ceotmufe was gone, and was the more approoued for his valour in Armes, and the An.Do.821 lesse resisted for his ancient descent, being sprung from ofher, a man reputed to be of the Mercian royall bloud. But Bernulfe perceining the fortunes of Egbert, accounted those his happie successes to bee his owne fhame, and by defiance challenged the west-Saxons to the field which Egbert accepted, and vpon Ellendon ioined Battle with the Mercians, which was fought to the much losse of both their blouds. Notwithstanding at last the west-saxons prenailed, Bernulfe being forced to flie with shame. The East-Angles that then had yeelded to Egbert, and but lately before had felt the fury of Bermife, thought the time fit to repay him againe, and therefore in warlike manner assaulted his Territories, where hee, in defending his Countrey against their attempts, was in a skirmish slaine, after he ad raigned not fully three yeeres. V decan then was chosen King of the Mercians. An.Do.824 whose bloud was not downe fince their last losse, neither reuenge forgotten against the East-Angles and therefore the yeere following made strength (sufficient to their feeming) to meet these their enemies. But the State of Heptarchie now drawne to the period, and the supporters thereof weakened by their own diuisions, the Iland declined to a present alteration, & gaue place to a more absolute kind of Monar-chy, that in Egbert the West-Saxon was now begun; who aiding the East-Angles against the Mercians, Ludecan their King fought with no better successe then Bernulf before him had done; whose raigne lasted not fully 2 yeers, nor his memoriall reuiued either in wife or iffue

Berthulf vpon the like composition of Tribute, An.Do.839. Saxons foueraigntie, held the kingdome of Mercia as Pertouf. a Substitute, and without any notable reports of his Acts, so raigned the space of thirteene yeeres. At this time the Sea-rouers out of Denmarke, that had often infested this Handwith their many Inuasions, got the head so strong, and wing sofarre, even to the middle part thereof, (as this of Mercia was) that they filled with terror the hearts of the Inhabitants, and stained the foile with the bloud of their fides, which in a most barbarous crueltie daily they shed; whose rage was so great, and mindes so vnsatiable, that Berthulf was enforced to forfake the Country, and in a more prinate estate to secure his owne life. He had a sonne will Me named Berefred, who was the causer of Saint Wystans for of S. wyfung martyrdome.

Byrdred, the last Mercian King, was thereunto de-puted by Ethelwolfe the West-Saxon Monarch, as a An.Do.852. shield of defence against the raging Danes, that made desolations where they came. In continual imploiments against them he spent his time, and that with fuch noble resolutions and manhood, that Ethelwolfe held him worthy of his alliance, and made him his sonne in law, by giuing him Lady Ethelfwith his daughter to Wife, the marriage being solemnized at Chipnham in Wilthire, with great estate. This Burdred with Ethelwolfe, warred against the Britaines with vi-drorie, and he with Alured compelled the Danes under the conduct of Hungar and Vbba, to idiflodge from Nottingham, and depart the Pronince. Yet laftly, after Ment. well. twenty two yeeres raigne, hee was fo ouerlaid with the Pronince their daily supplies, that three of their Kings (as our They returne Writers terme them) whole names were Godrun, Eske- with 3. Kings. tell, and Anmond, wintred at * Ripindon, and fore wafted his Kingdome.
